Executive Summary

This is one of three investigations by the Inquiry into the nature and extent of allegations of sexual abuse of children in the care of local authorities. The primary purpose of this investigation was to examine the institutional responses to such allegations of Nottinghamshire County Council, Nottingham City Council, and other organisations such as Nottinghamshire Police and the Crown Prosecution Service, and to consider the adequacy of steps taken to protect children from abuse.

These two councils were chosen because of the high level of allegations of sexual abuse of children in their care over many years. The Inquiry received evidence of around 350 complainants who made allegations of sexual abuse whilst in the care of the Councils from the 1960s onwards, though the true scale is likely to be higher. This is the largest number of specific allegations of sexual abuse in a single investigation that the Inquiry has considered to date.

For more than five decades, the Councils failed in their statutory duty to protect children in their care from sexual abuse. These were children who were being looked after away from their family homes because of adverse childhood experiences and their own pre-existing vulnerabilities. They needed to be nurtured, cared for and protected by adults they could trust. Instead, the Councils exposed them to the risk, and reality, of sexual abuse perpetrated primarily by predatory residential staff and foster carers.

In residential care, there were poor recruitment practices, few qualified staff and little in-service training. This was compounded by overcrowding and low staffing ratios. It was as if anyone could carry out the important work of being a substitute parent to damaged children. In some instances, a sexualised culture existed in residential homes, with staff behaving wholly inappropriately towards children, paving the way for sexual abuse. Whilst set standards of conduct and child protection procedures were put in place, there was little proper training provided to help staff understand their employers' requirements, nor action taken against those who did not comply. Staff ignored these standards and procedures with impunity.

Nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that, regardless of all other considerations, the sexual abuse of children should have been regarded by all staff as a criminal offence.

Residential care carried little priority with senior managers, even when they were aware of escalating numbers of allegations of sexual abuse. Whilst there were some improvements over time, with awareness of the problem improving, directors of social services and children's social care failed to fully address the issue in both residential and foster care. Nor were elected members informed of the scale of the abuse.

Neither of the Councils learned from their mistakes, despite commissioning many reviews which made clear what changes were needed in their care systems to stop the sexual abuse of children.

During the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s, physical violence and sexual abuse occurred in many of the Councils' children's homes and in foster care. This included repeated rapes (vaginal, anal and oral), sexual assaults, and voyeurism. Harmful sexual behaviour also occurred between children in both settings.

Between the late 1970s and 2019, 16 residential staff were convicted of sexual abuse of children in residential care, 10 foster carers were convicted of sexual abuse of their foster children, and the Inquiry is aware of 12 convictions relating to the harmful sexual behaviour of children against other children in care. The offences in residential care took place in Beechwood and a number of other children's residential units, including the following 12 establishments: Hazelwood, Skegby Hall, Edwinstowe, Sandown Road, Wollaton House, Hillcrest, Risley Hall, Greencroft, Beckhampton Road, Woodnook, Amberdale and Three Roofs.

Some of the convicted offenders are detailed below:

Two offenders, Norman Campbell and Christopher Metcalfe, were convicted of sexual assaults against children in both residential care and foster care.

Patrick Gallagher was convicted of 55 counts of sexual abuse committed between 1998 and 2010 against 16 children, seven of whom were in care. He was given 13 life sentences, with a minimum of 28 years' imprisonment.

Robert Thorpe was convicted in 2009 of several counts of indecent assault and unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 13 who was being fostered by his friends. He was given five years' imprisonment.

Dean Gathercole was convicted of six counts of indecent assault and three counts of rape of two residents at Amberdale in the late 1980s. He was given a prison sentence of 19 years in 2018.

Accounts of abuse include:

L17 was raped on "four or five occasions" by staff member Colin Wallace, who was later convicted. She was made to masturbate Wallace in a communal lounge in Beechwood, where other children and staff were present.

P2 was in foster care in the 1960s, and was raped by her foster father on camping holidays.

P13 was sexually abused between 1979 and 1981 by the 21-year-old brother of his foster mother and was forced to masturbate him and perform oral sex.

A76 spent 16 years in care in 21 placements. She was abused by older boys in several children's homes and was the victim of rape and sexual assault.

Over the years, as local authority boundaries changed, responsibility for some of the services referred to in this report moved between the County and the City. The Inquiry selected three case studies to examine in detail the responses of institutions to sexual abuse of children in the care of the two councils.

Beechwood

Beechwood operated for 39 years, from 1967 to 2006, and was run for periods by the City and County. It was run first as a remand home, then as an observation and assessment centre, and later a community home. In common with residential care across England at the time, it was poorly resourced and managed. Care staff were predominantly unqualified and received little, if any, training. Even with these similarities, however, no other residential homes in Nottinghamshire have had the level of allegations of sexual abuse which have been made about Beechwood staff.

It was not a safe environment for vulnerable children. Staff were threatening and violent, physical abuse was commonplace and children were frightened. Sexualised behaviour by staff was tolerated or overlooked, allowing abusers such as John Dent, Barrie Pick and Andris Logins to flourish. Managers at Beechwood, notably Ken Rigby, were either complacent or deliberately ignored the plight of children under their care. There were only two disciplinary actions taken when allegations of sexual abuse were made, and those were inadequate. When the City took over the running of Beechwood in 1998, the staff environment had not improved and children and young people were still at risk of sexual abuse. The City allowed Beechwood to continue operating for a further eight years, when it should have been closed much earlier.

As one example, L29 was remanded into the care of the City in 2005 and placed at Beechwood for four months, when he alleges he was repeatedly abused by a male member of staff. In 2015, he came forward to the police and felt that they believed him. He had not received an apology from the City, which made him “very angry”. He said, “I don’t see any future for myself. I understand that I had problems before Beechwood, but, in my opinion, Beechwood put me where I am today”.

Foster care

This case study considered the institutional responses to sexual abuse in foster care from the 1960s to the present day. Foster care has been, and still is, the most common placement for children in the care of both of the Councils. The overall picture from the mid-1970s to the 1990s shows an inconsistent approach to the recruitment, assessment and support of foster carers, and the supervision of children’s placements. When allegations of sexual abuse were made, there was too much willingness on the part of Council staff to take the side of the foster carers and to disbelieve the child. There was no effective or rigorous assessment of individual allegations.

In one particularly shocking case, in the 1970s, the County returned children to foster care after the foster carer pleaded guilty to the sexual assault of his two nieces. In 1985, a County foster carer (who was also a residential care worker) admitted sexually assaulting a foster child, after previous allegations against him had been regarded as “malicious” by children’s social care. In January 2014, NO-F77 was convicted of sexually abusing children in foster care, having fostered over 30 children in the care of the County between 1998 and 2012 although there had been previous allegations of sexual abuse, most significantly in 2000, when social workers concluded that they had “no doubt” that the abuse did not occur. Foster children were left at risk by the County, resulting in preventable abuse.

There was also sexual abuse by City foster carers. For example, Raymond Smith was deregistered as a foster carer in 2004 following allegations of sexual abuse by children in foster care and was, in 2016, convicted of sexually abusing a child not in care. By this time it was noted that, during Smith's time as a foster carer, there had been allegations "by a number of young people of a sexual nature".

L35, who was physically and sexually abused whilst in foster care in the 1980s, was angry "that the foster carers were allowed to get away with abusing children in their care for so long and nothing was done about it. No one took foster children seriously ... there was no punishment for the foster parents. They got away with everything."

Despite improvements, there continue to be weaknesses in foster care practice in both Councils.

Harmful sexual behaviour

For most of the period under review in this investigation, harmful sexual behaviour between children in the care of the Councils has not been well understood by professionals involved with children in care. Between 1988 and 1995, five separate reports into harmful sexual behaviour in five County community homes were conducted. In one home, all children resident over a 12-month period were found to have been exposed to harmful sexual behaviour. Policies and procedures were established but the issue was not viewed holistically across the five homes, so the work was largely wasted and learning was lost.

D31, a victim of harmful sexual behaviour at Greencroft when she was aged 12, told us of five incidents of sexual abuse involving older male residents. She had been placed at Greencroft with much older children which, along with a failure to monitor risks posed by other children and a lack of guidance for staff, left her at risk of abuse.

Neither of the Councils have a satisfactory approach to addressing the issue of harmful sexual behaviour of children in care. The County has taken steps to audit its practice. The City provided very little evidence to the Inquiry about its current practice, or of any recent steps taken to improve it, notwithstanding the inclusion of harmful sexual behaviour as a case study in this investigation. Despite present, widespread awareness of the issue, there is no national strategy or framework for the prevention of, or response to, harmful sexual behaviour between children in care.

Nottinghamshire Police

In 2011, Nottinghamshire Police initiated Operation Daybreak to investigate allegations of non-recent abuse of children in residential care. However, this was not adequately resourced, the police did not treat allegations with sufficient seriousness, and valuable time was lost. In 2015, Operation Daybreak was subsumed into Operation Equinox. Since that time there have been a number of prosecutions, bringing increased confidence amongst complainants in the force's commitment. Nevertheless, only now have Nottinghamshire Police begun to address weaknesses in its approach to child protection, as identified in recent HMIC (known as HMICFRS from summer 2017) inspection reports.

Apologies, acknowledgment and support

The Councils have taken different approaches to apologising for non-recent abuse and acknowledging past failures to protect children in their care. Whilst the County have made a public apology, the City have been guarded and slow to apologise or express appreciation for the level of distress felt by complainants. An example of this was the reported comment, in 2018, from the then City Council Leader that “we will apologise when there is something to apologise for”. This was crass and caused avoidable upset.

Provision and consistency of support and counselling for those who have suffered sexual abuse in care remains an issue.

Recommendations

We make recommendations covering issues such as risk assessments of current and former foster carers and residential care staff, and the approach to harmful sexual behaviour.

Pen portraits from children in the care of the Nottinghamshire Councils

This investigation received many accounts of sexual abuse from those who were in the care of the Nottinghamshire Councils. A selection of these are set out here, and others are referred to throughout the report.

D6

D6¹ was born in 1995 and taken into foster care in 2005 after a horrific experience at home. He was in the care of the City, which, whilst retaining responsibility for him, placed him in foster care in Yorkshire with NO-F70, via an independent fostering agency. Multiple allegations of abuse were made against NO-F70, but investigations were dropped quickly and NO-F70 moved with D6 to the Isle of Wight.

Following the move, social work visits to D6 became “sporadic” and were often cancelled. D6 told us of being physically assaulted and intimidated by NO-F70 and then, in 2007, sexually abused by him. D6 was eventually removed from NO-F70’s care after two allegations of child sexual abuse were made against NO-F70, although there was no investigation at that time into whether D6 had also been abused by NO-F70.

In 2017, D6 reported his abuse to the police but there was some confusion about which force should be investigating it. The abuse resulted in D6 trying to take his own life on a number of occasions, and standing outside the City’s offices having covered himself in petrol. He told the Inquiry:

“I am still full of fury about what NO-F70 did to me. I don’t understand how someone with an allegation of underage sexual assault made against them can have been allowed to continue to foster children.”

L29

L29² was born in 1990. In 2005, he was remanded into the care of the City and placed at Beechwood for four months. He alleges being forced to perform oral sex on a male member of staff, NO-F61:

“He would give me things such as fags and money, before and after the abuse. I think this was his way of getting me to comply and keep the abuse a secret.”

L29 would run away to escape the abuse and, on occasion, would be returned by the police. He did not tell them what was happening with NO-F61 as he did not trust them. He came forward again more recently to the police, in 2015, and says that he felt they believed him. He had not received an apology from the City, which made him “very angry”:

“I don’t see any future for myself. I understand that I had problems before Beechwood, but, in my opinion, Beechwood put me where I am today.”

L35

L35³ was born in 1982 and was placed in foster care with NO-F116 and NO-F117 in 1987. She had previously been physically and sexually abused at home; in 1989, a number of adults in L35’s family were convicted of abuse against her, her siblings and cousins.

In foster care, L35 was physically and sexually abused. She said that NO-F116 “would sometimes touch me between my legs. I remember being sat on the sofa and he would put his hand down my trousers. He never forced himself on to me but would make me touch his penis and him touch me.”

L35 disclosed the abuse in 1989, but did not leave the placement for another six months. An investigation by the police and children’s social care was conducted subsequently into allegations from her and others. L35 was not interviewed. The foster carers were not prosecuted, although L35 was told that they would not be allowed to foster again. L35 is angry that the foster carers “were allowed to get away with abusing children in their care for so long and nothing was done about it. No one took foster children seriously. We made disclosures. There were various investigations and to an extent we were believed but there was no punishment for the foster parents. They got away with everything.”

N1

N1⁴ was taken into the care of the County in 1982, aged 12, having been sexually abused at home. She was placed at Beechwood for around 18 months, during which time she was sexually abused by Andris Logins, a member of residential care staff. She described how Logins was “really friendly” towards her, recalling that “He was the only person there that was nice to me.” She told us of a number of instances in which they had sexual intercourse at Beechwood and said “All, if not most, staff members at Beechwood knew about the abuse but failed to prevent or report it.”

After leaving care, N1 turned to drugs, drink and “prostitution” and was living a “really dysfunctional life”. She only told the police about the abuse in 2012 when they contacted her as part of their investigation into Beechwood. She was very positive about her treatment by the police, who updated her regularly. Logins was convicted in 2016 of sexually abusing her and others.

D22

D22⁵ was born in 1969 and taken into care in 1978. He had various different placements, including two at Beechwood in 1978 or 1979 and in 1984. At Beechwood, he was sexually abused by two male members of staff, NO-F29 and another.

⁵ D22.3.October.2018.145/19:148/19.

"I remember that both men abused me on multiple occasions. They both touched me inappropriately. They both forced me to masturbate them. They both forced me to perform oral sex on them."

D22 also recalls being sexually abused by two male members of staff at Skegby Hall, as well as being physically and racially abused there. At South Collingham Hall, another children's home, he was sexually abused on three occasions by an older boy, including one rape, one attempted rape and an incident of sexual touching.

He did not tell anyone about the sexual abuse at the time. He did not think he would be believed:

"I never wanted anyone to find out what had been done to me. As a young black kid, I didn't know who to turn to or who to trust. I remember that I tried to run away from Beechwood and the staff caught me just down the road. I think this happened about three times. I remember that I told them that I didn't want to go back to Beechwood."

He also says at times he blamed himself: "The abuse I suffered has always been a source of shame and embarrassment for me. The thought of talking about it has been, and still is, very frightening." In the last 10 years he has contacted solicitors and reported his abuse to the police, who have kept him updated about their investigation.

A76

A76⁶ was born in 1969 and spent 16 years in care, moving placement 21 times, including both children's homes and foster placements. She was raped twice by an older boy at one children's home: "He told me that if I told anyone about what he had done, he would beat me until I was dead." She tried to tell a female staff member but was "just too scared". She was also sexually assaulted by another boy at the home, but did not report it:

"I never stayed in one place long enough to feel like I had any one adult who I could trust to report what had happened to me at the time."

A76 noted that, in her social services records, there was a letter from a social worker dated February 1990, which stated that "her experiences in care were not a credit to the department". A76 told us, "With the greatest respect, this feels like the understatement of the century. I was treated appallingly by Social Services and they know it."

L48⁷ was born in 1964 and admitted into care in 1969. In 1971, he was placed in foster care with NO-F275 and NO-F358. He moved with them to Cheshire, but remained in the care of Nottingham City Council. He was sexually abused by NO-F275 but, as he was not able to see a social worker alone, felt unable to disclose the abuse.

His next foster placement was with NO-F276, who sexually abused him when he was aged 11 and treated all of the foster children as "slaves". L48 was unable to disclose the abuse as he was frightened people would not believe him and the abuse had made him confused about his sexuality.

He first reported the abuse to the County's children's social care service in 1985, but felt that he was not believed from the outset. He withdrew the complaint. He complained to the County again in 2015 and felt believed by Steve Edwards (then Service Director for children's social care), who organised counselling and for him and other complainants to give talks to social workers and foster carers about their experiences in care and the lessons to be learned.

In 2017, NO-F275 was acquitted after being charged with abuse of L48. L48's sexual abuse allegations against NO-F276 were investigated by the City's Safeguarding Children Board, which found that they were unsubstantiated. L48 found the process followed by the Safeguarding Children Board to be "insulting".

Part A

Introduction

Nottinghamshire

Introduction

A.1: Background

1. This is the second of three investigations considering the sexual abuse of children in the care of local authorities.⁸ In this report, we focus on children in the care of Nottingham City Council (the City) and Nottinghamshire County Council (the County) (together, the Councils). Specifically, we consider the nature and extent of allegations of sexual abuse of children in the care of the Councils, the response of the Councils, Nottinghamshire Police and the Crown Prosecution Service to those allegations, and the steps taken to protect children in care in light of them.
2. Until 1974, in Nottinghamshire, responsibility for children in care was divided between the County, Nottingham Borough Council (the precursor to the City) and the Home Office. Between 1974 and 1998, the County was the sole local authority responsible for all children in care across the city and the county. Since a local government reorganisation in 1998, the City and the County have been two separate local authorities. Where we refer to a geographical area including both the County and the City, we use the term 'Nottinghamshire'.
3. The two Councils are responsible for a geographical area of approximately 2,160 square kilometres.⁹ In 2017, there were roughly 818,000 people living in the County¹⁰ and 329,000 in the City.¹¹
4. The number of children in care within the area covered by the Councils has fluctuated over time.

The City's consistently higher proportion of children in care is likely to reflect its higher levels of deprivation.¹² Both Councils saw a significant reduction in these numbers between 1989 and 2002, as more community-based services for children were developed.

5. In terms of residential care provision, the City now has seven registered children's homes (managed within children's social care) and, since 2015, has had no children's homes with more than four long-term beds.¹³ It also places children in its care in 19 children's homes run by private or voluntary organisations,¹⁴ but a "high proportion" of children in residential care are placed outside the City, in children's homes run by other local authorities, due to a lack of available placements.¹⁵ The County has six registered children's homes¹⁶ and, as at March 2018, had 93 children who were placed in children's homes, 79 percent of whom were in privately-run homes.¹⁷

6. Foster care has long been the preferred placement for the majority of children in care. The most recent figures suggest approximately 63 percent of children in the care of the County,¹⁸ and 73 percent of children in the care of the City,¹⁹ are in foster care. Similarly, of those in foster care, 43 percent of those in the County and 56 percent of those in the City are placed through independent fostering agencies.²⁰

7. In early 2010, local media in Nottingham reported that a number of people who had spent time in children's homes between the 1970s and the 1990s alleged that they had been sexually abused by staff. As the number of allegations increased, Nottinghamshire Police initiated a dedicated investigation, Operation Daybreak, which is now part of the ongoing Operation Equinox. By 2014 or 2015, the media focus shifted to the apparent lack of outcomes from the police investigations or action by the Councils. Locally, there was a widespread perception that the allegations had not been properly investigated, as there had not been (at that time) any prosecutions as a result.

8. Between the late 1970s and 2019, in Nottinghamshire, the Inquiry is aware of:

- 16 staff convicted of sexual abuse against more than 30 children in residential care;
- 10 foster carers convicted of the sexual abuse of approximately 25 children in their care;²¹
- three foster carers convicted of the sexual abuse of seven children not in their care;
- two relatives of foster carers convicted of sexually abusing two children in foster care; and
- 12 convictions in relation to harmful sexual behaviour between children in care. This figure only includes those cases which we know resulted in a conviction or a caution. We do not have an accurate number of substantiated cases. There are large numbers of allegations which were regarded as substantiated at the time by the County's children's social care service, and some in which charges were recommended. However, we do not have evidence of convictions in these cases.²²

Further detail of these convictions is included in Annex 3.

A.2: Nature and extent of allegations of sexual abuse

9. The sexual abuse of children in the care of the Councils²³ was widespread in both residential and foster care during the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s.

10. The sexual abuse alleged in this investigation varies widely. It includes repeated rapes and other sexual assaults, related physical abuse, voyeurism and sexually inappropriate physical contact. The abuse was carried out by a range of perpetrators, including residential care staff, foster carers and their relatives, and children in care. Some allegations relate to single perpetrators, whereas others concern sexual abuse by more than one perpetrator at the same time. Several complainants make a number of allegations of sexual abuse during their time in care, including within the same placement.

11. Children in the care of the Councils have also been victims of child sexual exploitation.²⁴ By the mid-to-late 1990s, the County and then the City began to address this issue, including the introduction of a joint protocol with Nottinghamshire Police, a multi-agency group on sexual exploitation and a Home Office pilot project.²⁵ (This report does not consider child sexual exploitation in detail, as this will be addressed in a separate investigation within the Inquiry.²⁶)

²³ From 1974 to 1998, children were solely in the care of the County.

²⁴ Until the mid-to-late 1990s, this was often regarded, and referred to, as prostitution.

²⁵ NSC000054; NCC003691 para. 6.34; NSC001235 para. 6j.11; NSC001642. This work led to the award of a National Social Care Award (CQC000038_21).

²⁶ Relevant evidence will be considered through the Inquiry's investigation into Child Sexual Exploitation by Organised Networks.

12. In addition to evidence from complainant core participants, the Inquiry has reviewed information from police investigations, civil litigation claims, disciplinary investigations and foster care investigations. Around 350 individuals report having been sexually abused whilst in the care of the Councils from the 1960s onwards. This includes 259 accounts of sexual abuse in residential care,²⁷ 91 in foster care²⁸ and 89 accounts of harmful sexual behaviour.²⁹ Of the 71 complainant core participants who provided a statement to the Inquiry but were not called to give evidence, 57 make allegations of sexual abuse in residential care and 18 in foster care, and 13 give accounts of being the victims of harmful sexual behaviour by other children.³⁰

13. The true number of children who suffered sexual abuse in the care of the Councils is likely to be higher than these figures. There are multiple barriers to disclosure during childhood, many of which continue into adulthood. Additionally, there are very few remaining records from the Councils regarding their response to allegations of sexual abuse before the 1980s, and none from the police, because records have been destroyed in accordance with the record retention policies of the day. If a child did report sexual abuse at the time, it may never have been recorded. The absence of records therefore does not mean children were not being sexually abused during this period, simply that we do not have documentary evidence.

14. In some cases, there have been convictions for sexual abuse of children in care, as well as dismissals or disciplinary action taken against staff members, deregistration of foster carers and the settling of civil claims. In others, complainants were not believed, alleged perpetrators died before allegations were reported, or children's social care, the police or the Crown Prosecution Service decided not to take any action.

A.3: Case studies

15. In order to investigate the institutional responses to allegations of child sexual abuse in Nottinghamshire, including the barriers to disclosure, the Inquiry selected three case studies.³¹

15.1. Beechwood was initially a remand home, then an observation and assessment centre, before being designated as a children's home in 1984. Since 2011, it has been the subject of extensive police investigation into allegations of sexual abuse, as well as a focus of the local media. It is also the single institution with the largest number of allegations of sexual abuse made to the Inquiry.³² Although a large number of allegations of child sexual abuse had been made in recent years, there was little evidence of allegations being made or responded to at the time. This case study illustrates the barriers to reporting faced by children in care.

³² INQ002574; INQ002576; INQ002577.

15.2. Foster care, throughout the period under review, has been the primary placement for children in care. Complainant core participants made 26 allegations of sexual abuse in foster care³³ and there were a substantial number of documents dealing with the Councils' responses to complaints made at the time.

15.3. Harmful sexual behaviour between children in care does not appear to have been the focus of any public inquiry in the UK. However, it is estimated that between one-third and two-thirds of allegations of child sexual abuse in the UK are made against young people under the age of 18.³⁴ In Nottinghamshire, five internal investigations were conducted into harmful sexual behaviour between 1988 and 1995 in five separate children's homes.

16. In addition, there were many allegations of sexual abuse falling outside these specific case studies, which relate to other residential homes (such as Amberdale, Skegby Hall, Greencroft and Hazelwood). These are recorded in summary tables,³⁵ and institutional responses to some of those allegations are addressed further below.

A.4: Methodology

17. The methodology adopted by the Inquiry is set out in Annex 1. Core participant status was granted under Rule 5 of the Inquiry Rules 2006 to 96 core participants, including 88 complainants who alleged they were sexually abused whilst in the care of the Councils.

18. The overarching issues considered in this investigation derived from the scope of the investigation set by the Inquiry³⁶ and the Terms of Reference for the Inquiry set by the Home Secretary.³⁷ These were to:

- (a) establish the nature and extent of allegations of sexual abuse of children in the care of the Councils and barriers to the disclosure of such abuse;
- (b) analyse the institutional responses to allegations and how these have changed, with a particular focus on our case studies;
- (c) reach conclusions as to what happened, holding institutions to account for past and current failings; and
- (d) make recommendations as to what can improve the situation in the future.

19. After three preliminary hearings, public hearings were held over 15 days in October 2018, including seven days of hearings in Nottingham.

20. At the public hearings, we heard accounts from 12 complainants about their experiences as children who had been sexually abused in care.³⁸ An additional 71 complainant core participants provided written evidence of their experiences, with parts of each read into the record during the public hearings.³⁹

21. Evidence was provided by institutional witnesses about a range of factual matters. These included: broad questions about the level of managerial scrutiny of residential homes and foster care; how the Councils conducted investigations into staff and foster carers accused of sexual abuse; whether they followed through on what the investigations revealed; and, when they did commission internal reports, how effective the Councils were in carrying out recommendations intended to protect children. Other issues included why children found it so difficult to disclose sexual abuse, what happened when they did disclose and the individual experiences of adults disclosing childhood abuse.

22. Various institutions, including the Councils, Nottinghamshire Police, the Crown Prosecution Service, Ofsted and the Department for Education, also provided corporate statements and documents.

23. The Inquiry commissioned a report from Professor Simon Hackett, an expert on harmful sexual behaviour between children. He is Professor of Child Abuse and Neglect at Durham University and, over the course of the last 20 years, has undertaken a series of research studies and written a variety of articles and books on harmful sexual behaviour. Professor Hackett was asked to provide his opinion on a number of topics, including the developing understanding of harmful sexual behaviour between children, the evolving response to the issue and the barriers to disclosure of this type of behaviour.

24. The Inquiry reviewed a large amount of witness and documentary evidence, which was disclosed to core participants where relevant. Due to the lack of evidence in relation to earlier periods, this report covers the period from the late 1960s to date.

25. References in this report such as 'NSC000102' and 'NSC000102_10' are to documents or specific pages of documents that have been adduced in evidence and can be found on the Inquiry's website. A reference such as 'Hicks 19 October 2018 142/8-23' is to the hearing transcript which is also available on the website; that particular reference is to the evidence of Rhona Hicks on 19 October 2018 at page 142, lines 8 to 23.

Part B

Context

B.1: Introduction

1. Throughout this report, when referring to staff within the Councils who had a statutory responsibility for children, including children in care, we have referred to children's social care. Until 2006, this work was carried out by social services departments, and after then by new children's services departments.⁴⁰ The terms 'children's social care' or 'children's social care service' are used throughout for consistency.

B.2: Child protection issues in the early 1990s

2. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, a "deep rift" arose between Nottinghamshire Police and the County's children's social care service following a major child abuse investigation involving an extended family in Broxtowe.⁴¹ The investigation led to 10 adults being charged in February 1989 with 53 offences of indecent assault, incest and cruelty against 23 children. In December 1989, a joint enquiry team of police officers and social workers warned that "there could be a total breakdown of Police/Social Service relationships with incalculable consequences".⁴² By September 1991, the "extent of this antagonism, and the damage ensuing from it, was ... considerable".⁴³

3. In 1991, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) and the Department of Health's Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) conducted a joint inspection of child abuse investigations in the County.⁴⁴ Although only seven of the 20 cases inspected concerned children in care,⁴⁵ the inspectors criticised a lack of training and made a number of recommendations, including that all child sexual abuse investigations should be undertaken by trained officers within Nottinghamshire Police's Family Support Unit (FSU), supported by specialist children's social care staff. They also said the Area Child Protection Committee (ACPC)⁴⁶ needed urgently to disseminate revised procedures and provide appropriate training to ensure implementation.

4. Between 1990 and 1995, there was a crisis in the County's child protection capability:

4.1. There were more than 800 'unallocated cases' in 1990,⁴⁷ leading to the Department of Health threatening to intervene.⁴⁸ This was reduced to zero by the end of 1991.⁴⁹

4.2. There were 14 child deaths reported to the SSI between 1990 and 1992.⁵⁰ One death generated significant publicity, which intensified in December 1993 when the County decided not to start disciplinary proceedings against the social workers involved in the case, and promoted them.⁵¹

4.3. In 1994, two highly critical internal and external reports on child protection in the County were published.⁵²

As a result, the SSI considered there was “a serious problem”⁵³ and the Health Minister had “very great concerns about the poor performance ... in the protection of children at risk”.⁵⁴

5. The County also identified “serious weaknesses” in its children’s social care service in 1994, with services not meeting the required standards of the Children Act 1989, weak information systems, abandoned internal training programmes, poorly kept records and inadequate recruitment practices.⁵⁵ Both David White, the County’s Director of Social Services, and Joan Taylor, Chair of the Social Services Committee, subsequently resigned.⁵⁶

6. In September 1994, an SSI inspection concluded that the children’s social care service “had not yet safely established a competent child protection service for children and families in Nottinghamshire”.⁵⁷ The SSI became directly involved in ‘monitoring’⁵⁸ children’s social care until August 1995, when the SSI decided that sufficient progress had been made.⁵⁹ A further SSI inspection in December 1995 commented that “considerable efforts had been made ... to transform a dismal child protection investigative service”.⁶⁰

7. The Broxtowe investigation occupied significant time and focus,⁶¹ and diverted attention away from child abuse investigations.⁶² As a consequence, children in care were not given sufficient priority, despite the large number of investigations and prosecutions into the sexual abuse of children in residential and foster care. There was an unwarranted assumption that they were protected by the carers themselves.⁶³

B.3: Governance

Management within the Councils

8. Although management structures have changed over time, staff within the children’s social care service have had day-to-day responsibility for all children in care in Nottinghamshire. The Director of Children’s Services within each of the Councils now has “professional” responsibility for the leadership, strategy and effectiveness of children’s services. This includes securing the provision of services to address the needs of children and young people.⁶⁴ The Youth, Families and Social Work Division of the County's Children and Families Department is responsible for all children's social care within the County, including fostering and children's homes.⁶⁵ In the City, management oversight of children's homes and fostering placements is the responsibility of the Head of Service for Children in Care, who operates within the Children's Integrated Services directorate.⁶⁶

The role of elected councillors

9. The way in which elected members have exercised governance responsibility for children in care has varied over time. Since 2004, both the County and the City have a councillor charged with specific accountability for children in care.⁶⁷ That elected Lead Member for Children's Services has political accountability for the leadership, strategy and effectiveness of children's services. This includes setting the priorities for children's services and providing support and challenge to the Director of Children's Services.⁶⁸

10. Collectively, councillors act as the 'corporate parent' for children in care, which requires them to act in the best interests of children in care and ensure that they are kept safe.⁶⁹ Councillors also receive regular reports about children in care, including annual reports from the Fostering Service and the Independent Reviewing Officer service.⁷⁰

Oversight of children's homes

11. The oversight of the Councils' children's homes has also developed over time:

11.1. Since the early 1990s, internal 'inspections' have been required by children's social care every month.⁷¹ These were undertaken by children's social care managers until 2014, since when they have been undertaken by an independent person appointed by the Councils.⁷²

11.2. From 1991 to 2004, children's homes were also inspected by an 'arm's length' body (structurally independent of those managers responsible for the operation of social services).⁷³ This involved at least two visits per year – one announced and one unannounced.⁷⁴

In the City, this was, until May 2019, the Portfolio Holder for Early Intervention and Early Years (Councillor David Mellen) and is now the Portfolio Holder for Children and Young People (Councillor Cheryl Barnard); in the County, it is the Chair of the Children and Young People's Committee, currently Councillor Philip Owen.

⁶⁹ The seven corporate parenting principles were introduced by the Children Act 1989.

⁷² Regulation 43 Children's Homes (England) Regulations 2015.

⁷⁴ Regulation 28(2)-28(4) Children's Homes Regulations 1991.

11.3. Since 2000, all children’s homes have been required to register with the registration authority (currently Ofsted).⁷⁵ To maintain registration, a children’s home must have a statement of purpose, a children’s guide and prescribed policies and procedures, as well as prescribed staffing ratios and qualifications.⁷⁶

11.4. Elected councillors have also made visits to homes on a regular basis (called ‘rota visits’) since the 1970s, and have reported their findings to a committee.⁷⁷ These visits vary in their effectiveness, with witnesses describing them as “next to useless”⁷⁸ and “widely perceived as a token”.⁷⁹

B.4: Response to allegations of child sexual abuse

Policies and procedures for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse

12. The first national guidance specifically addressing child sexual abuse was in 1988, in Working Together.⁸⁰ This was followed by 1991 guidance accompanying the Children Act 1989, which included the sexual abuse of children in care.⁸¹

13. Earlier, between 1974 and 1984, the County issued a succession of memorandums, procedures and guidance for its social services, dealing with “neglected or battered children” and non-accidental injury.⁸² The County’s 1978 ‘Policy and Procedure Guide (Community Homes)’ stated:

*“Instances of abuse of clients coming to the notice of any member of staff must be reported immediately ... The Officer-in-Charge must report all suspicions, or complaints regarding abuse of clients, to the appropriate Homes Adviser ... ”*⁸³

When investigations into allegations of sexual abuse by staff in children’s homes were conducted in the 1980s, they broadly followed the 1978 guidelines,⁸⁴ although the approach was inconsistent.⁸⁵

14. Policies dealing with child sexual abuse developed over the years:

14.1. In 1984, new multi-agency child abuse procedures within the County included responding to allegations of child sexual abuse made against foster carers, but did not apply to residential care.⁸⁶

⁷⁵ Care Standards Act 2000.

⁷⁹ INQ002957 para. 3. In March 2019, the County decided to cease carrying out rota visits and replace them with a new Governance Board to oversee the County’s children’s homes. It will still carry out visits but under new guidance, and will consider all reports on Regulation 44 visits (Rota Visits by Elected Members).

⁸¹ EWM000463_35-38. Prior to that, from the 1930s, the Home Office maintained a list of people considered unsuitable to work in approved schools (HOM002409_1, 7) and this was later extended to cover Local Authority Remand Homes and children’s homes. There was some Home Office guidance in place from the 1950s relating to “allegations of indecent practices” by staff in approved schools (EWM000463_16-17).

14.2. Specific guidance was issued in 1991 on responding to sexual abuse in residential care, both in the County⁸⁷ and across England and Wales,⁸⁸ following the Children Act 1989.

14.3. The 1992 Nottinghamshire ACPC procedures required an independent investigation by a senior member of staff if an allegation of abuse was made against either a member of residential care staff or a foster carer.⁸⁹ The safety of any other children in a foster care household was also to be considered.⁹⁰

14.4. The ACPC procedures emphasised three separate strands to the investigation of allegations against staff: child protection, disciplinary proceedings and criminal proceedings. They clarified that insufficient evidence to support a prosecution “does not mean that action does not need to be taken to protect the child, or that disciplinary procedures should not be invoked and pursued”.⁹¹

14.5. From the 1990s onwards, allegations against foster carers generally led to their suspension pending full investigation by children’s social care. Other foster children were placed elsewhere and no further placements were made in the interim.⁹² Concerns or allegations about a foster carer could lead to their deregistration, sometimes following a recommendation from the fostering panel.⁹³ Although allegations of sexual abuse should have triggered a review of the foster carer’s suitability,⁹⁴ reviews did not always happen where the police had decided to take no further action.⁹⁵

14.6. By 2004, the County published guidelines on conducting disciplinary investigations into staff⁹⁶ and the City began using their Local Safeguarding Children Board procedures.⁹⁷

15. Both Councils now require all allegations of sexual abuse to be reported to the local authority designated officer (LADO), a role introduced by the Children Act 2004.⁹⁸ The LADO is responsible for overseeing the multi-agency response to allegations of abuse made against adults working with children, “based on professional judgement on the balance of probabilities”.⁹⁹

16. In residential care, the Interagency Safeguarding Children Procedures (which apply to both Councils) set out the steps to follow when allegations of abuse are made against staff.¹⁰⁰ The County¹⁰¹ and the City¹⁰² also have their own complementary procedures for responding to allegations of abuse. These include multi-agency strategy meetings to discuss the allegations and any parallel disciplinary process or police investigation.¹⁰³ If no police investigation or social care enquiry is necessary (or once they are completed), the Councils must consider whether to take disciplinary action.

17. In foster care, all local authorities must set out the procedure to be followed in the event of any allegation of abuse or neglect against foster carers.¹⁰⁴ Detailed standards for handling allegations are set out in the 2011 National Minimum Standards.¹⁰⁵ The County's guidance on allegations against foster carers includes the assessment of the seriousness of the initial information, suspension of the foster carer, the continued placement of children, how to react to resignations and the holding of strategy discussions.¹⁰⁶ In the City, when information is received that a child in foster care is suffering or has suffered significant harm, the child's social worker will be informed, a multi-agency strategy meeting will take place and an investigation may follow that can result in the deregistration of the foster carer.¹⁰⁷

18. For both Councils, the framework for responding to allegations of non-recent abuse of a child in care is broadly the same as for recent allegations, although a number of additional considerations apply.¹⁰⁸

Notification to local safeguarding board or partnership

19. Between 2006 and 2018, where abuse or neglect of a child was known or suspected and the child had died or been seriously harmed, the Councils' Local Safeguarding Children Boards (LSCBs) would be notified and would make a recommendation if they decided a serious case review or some other form of review was required.¹⁰⁹

20. LSCBs were, in many local authorities, replaced by Safeguarding Children Partnerships from 2018.¹¹⁰ Since then, the Safeguarding Children Partnership or LSCB undertakes a "rapid review" and considers whether a child safeguarding practice review (the replacement for serious case reviews) is required. Because the criterion of "seriously harmed" must be met, not every case of known or suspected sexual abuse of a child in care will be considered by the Safeguarding Children Partnership,¹¹¹ and because of the additional criteria, even fewer will proceed to a review.

Notification to councillors

21. Historically, councillors would receive verbal reports from the Director of Social Services in relation to allegations of sexual abuse, although the extent of this varied. For example, the County's Social Services Committee received regular but limited information about disciplinary investigations of staff accused of sexually abusing children in residential care.¹¹²

Within the City, until the mid-2000s, councillors were informed of serious allegations of sexual abuse of children in care, although there was no formal system in place requiring this.¹¹³

22. In terms of today's practice, the County introduced ("about two weeks" before Councillor Owen, Lead Member for Children's Services in the County, gave evidence to the Inquiry¹¹⁴) a protocol for notifying the Lead Member of relevant incidents using an incident notification form.¹¹⁵ This covers all allegations against members of staff but not all allegations against foster carers or of harmful sexual behaviour¹¹⁶ and, while a log is to be maintained of all notifications, the level of detail provided will be decided in each case.

23. The City's Lead Member for Children's Services until May 2019, Councillor David Mellen, received verbal reports about allegations of sexual abuse of children in care, although he was not "involved in the detail".¹¹⁷ He thought the last such notification was about two years before our October 2018 hearings,¹¹⁸ but was fairly confident that he would be told of all allegations.¹¹⁹ The City did not have a written notification protocol at the time of the hearings.¹²⁰ Neither of the Councils has a process by which there has been regular reporting to the Lead Member of the number of allegations of sexual abuse of children in care and the response to those allegations.

Notification to external agencies

24. Since 2001, local authorities have been required to report 'notifiable events' to Ofsted and its predecessors, including the instigation and outcome of any child protection enquiry involving a child in residential care.¹²¹

25. There are now a number of notification regimes applicable to children's social care, including the following:

25.1. As set out above, allegations of sexual abuse of children, including those in care, where the child "has been seriously harmed and abuse or neglect is known or suspected",¹²² must be notified to the local Safeguarding Children Partnership or Local Safeguarding Children Board and to external agencies such as Ofsted.¹²³ Since 2018, the national Child Safeguarding Practice Review Panel must also be notified if a child dies or is seriously harmed and abuse is known or suspected.¹²⁴

However, since then, the City has developed a written notification protocol covering all allegations against staff and foster carers (but not of harmful sexual behaviour). The protocol is still under review (<https://www.iicsa.org.uk/key-documents/12159/view/NCC003812.pdf>).

¹²⁴ Section 16C(1) of the Children Act 2004, as amended by the Children and Social Work Act 2017.

25.2. The manager of a children’s home must notify Ofsted, the Department for Education (DfE) and the local authority of “serious events”. These include suspected involvement in sexual exploitation (including harmful sexual behaviour) and any allegation of abuse against the home or a person working there.¹²⁵

25.3. Children’s social care must notify Ofsted of various matters relating to children in foster care, including the “instigation and outcome of any child protection enquiry involving a child placed with foster parents”.¹²⁶

25.4. If allegations are substantiated and the perpetrator is still working with children, a referral must be made to the Disclosure and Barring Service.¹²⁷ Similarly, if the alleged perpetrator is a qualified social worker, allegations of sexual abuse must also be referred to the Health and Care Professions Council.¹²⁸ This does not apply to all residential care staff, as not all are qualified social workers.

B.5: External inspections

26. Until the 1980s, the Home Office and the Department of Health carried out occasional inspections of children’s homes. Responsibility for the inspection of children’s social care then varied over time.

26.1. In 1985, the SSI was established to inspect social services (including children’s social care) in order to “improve effectiveness and efficiency and to promote necessary development”. However, its focus was on the provision of social services as a whole; it rarely conducted specific inspections of individual children’s homes and did not undertake dedicated inspections of fostering services.¹²⁹

26.2. From April 2002, the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) was responsible for registering children’s homes and fostering services and then carrying out inspections after registration.¹³⁰ They carried out some,¹³¹ but did not establish a programme of regular inspections.

26.3. The SSI and NCSC were subsumed in April 2004 into the Commission for Social Care Inspection (CSCI), bringing registration, inspection, regulation and review of all social care services (including children’s homes and fostering services) under the remit of one organisation.¹³² It was only from this point onwards that there were regular external inspections of children’s homes and fostering services.

26.4. The CSCI and then Ofsted inspected children’s homes at least twice per year.¹³³ From 2004 to 2013, the Councils’ fostering services were subject to specific and regular inspections by the CSCI and then Ofsted, carried out against the framework of the national minimum standards.¹³⁴

27. In April 2007, the registration and inspection of children’s services became the responsibility of Ofsted.¹³⁵ Between 2007 and 2013, Ofsted conducted separate inspections of each local authority’s services in relation to “protection, care, adoption and fostering”.¹³⁶ This changed in 2013 to one single inspection framework,¹³⁷ including fostering services in a broader assessment of services for children in care.¹³⁸ This regime, criticised as an ineffective method of evaluation,¹³⁹ was replaced in 2018 with the Inspection of Local Authority Children’s Services (ILACS) framework.¹⁴⁰ Local authorities will continue to be inspected every three years but will also receive up to two “focused visits” between inspections that will look at specific issues. The less positive the outcome, the greater the number of follow-up visits and inspections that take place.¹⁴¹

B.6: Police approach to allegations of child sexual abuse

National developments

28. As set out in the report by the Crime and Security Research Institute at Cardiff University, commissioned by the Inquiry, the national approach to police investigations into allegations of child sexual abuse has developed over time.¹⁴²

28.1. From 1963, Home Office circulars referred to the need for police forces to work with local authorities in relation to children in need of care, protection and control. By 1988, sexual abuse was included in the definition of child abuse, joint working with social services was expected and the paramount consideration was the welfare of the child.

28.2. By the end of the 1990s, all forces had child protection units, which “normally” took primary responsibility for investigating child abuse cases. As a minimum, they were required to investigate all allegations of child abuse within the family or against a carer.¹⁴³

28.3. In the 2000s, both the Laming and Bichard Inquiries¹⁴⁴ criticised HMIC for not taking a sufficiently active role in child protection through its inspections of police forces. The Laming report also recommended that police officers in child protection roles should hold senior rank and have appropriate qualifications.

¹⁴⁴ The Victoria Climbié Inquiry: report of an inquiry by Lord Laming (2003) followed the abuse, neglect and murder of Victoria Climbié. The Bichard Inquiry (2004), concerned child protection measures, record keeping, vetting and information sharing in Humberside Police and Cambridgeshire Constabulary, following the conviction of Ian Huntley for the murders of Jessica Chapman and Holly Wells.

28.4. Since 2010, there has been a significant increase in the volume of allegations of non-recent sexual abuse, and an HMIC thematic review of child protection in eight police forces in 2014–15¹⁴⁵ found that some forces were struggling to manage rising investigative demands with “systemic weaknesses” and high workloads.

Nottinghamshire Police

29. Practices in Nottinghamshire Police have also developed over time.

29.1. In the 1970s, allegations of child abuse were investigated by officers in its Criminal Investigation Department (CID), who would make decisions on whether to prosecute and report outcomes to children’s social care.¹⁴⁶ Under multi-agency child abuse procedures in the County from 1984, police investigations¹⁴⁷ were to include regular contact with children’s social care and attendance at case conferences.

29.2. The force’s first specialist resource – the FSU – was established in 1988 to investigate child abuse allegations (although the CID continued to investigate some cases). It expanded over subsequent years to include a referral unit as a dedicated point of contact for all cases referred to the police by children’s social care.¹⁴⁸ In 1994, the FSU was renamed the Child Abuse Investigation Unit (CAIU)¹⁴⁹ and, by 1995, according to the SSI, it had the most officers per capita of all police units in the country specialising in child protection investigations.¹⁵⁰

29.3. There have been various iterations of procedures and guidance for Nottinghamshire Police on the investigation of child sexual abuse, including in 1992,¹⁵¹ 1997¹⁵² and subsequently.¹⁵³ In 2006, the force published its first specific Child Protection Investigation Procedures, which stated that a thorough investigation was required in all cases of alleged sexual abuse. The CAIU was responsible for investigating all allegations of sexual abuse of children in care by a foster carer or residential care staff member, where the complainant was still a child at the time of the allegation being made. Allegations of non-recent child abuse, where the complainant was over 18 years old at the time of the disclosure, were investigated by the CID.¹⁵⁴

29.4. In 2011, Nottinghamshire Police formed a Public Protection Department, bringing together “the various strands of police business that feature vulnerability and safeguarding”, including the CAIU, child sexual exploitation and Operation Equinox.¹⁵⁵

30. However, a number of recent inspections and reviews identify serious failings concerning Nottinghamshire Police’s investigations of allegations of child sexual abuse (including child sexual exploitation) and its relationship with the Councils.

30.1. A peer review¹⁵⁶ of Nottinghamshire Police’s child sexual exploitation capabilities in December 2014 found that “Social care and police appear to be working well together”. However, it also noted a “structural divide between City and County working” which was creating barriers to joint working, and that “Care Homes and Private providers are apparently engaged with more effectively in the City than the County, largely because of dedicated police post in the City, match-funded by social care ... The County approach needs to replicate this standard.”¹⁵⁷

30.2. An HMIC report in February 2015 identified a backlog in child protection cases. For example, there were delays in investigating an allegation of sexual assault made by a 10-year-old boy in foster care. Poor investigations were attributed to a “lack of capacity and the high volume of work”, with “an increase in the number of historic abuse cases”. Inspectors said that “much more needs to be done”¹⁵⁸ and made a number of recommendations, including that the force (together with children’s social care and other relevant agencies) carry out a review to ensure that it was discharging its statutory responsibilities.¹⁵⁹

30.3. A follow-up inspection, published in February 2016, found that Nottinghamshire Police had implemented some recommendations but “had not undertaken an audit of child abuse and sexual exploitation cases to improve standards”. It also noted that “non-specialist staff, such as frontline officers, were investigating child protection cases without having received training in how to manage them effectively”.¹⁶⁰ In response, the force implemented an action plan.¹⁶¹ When asked why some of the recommendations were not acted upon earlier, the Police and Crime Commissioner for Nottinghamshire, Paddy Tipping, told us:

*“the Nottinghamshire Police didn’t fully embrace the findings of the 2014 study. They thought it was unfair and misjudged and didn’t pay sufficient attention to providing the reports and actions that were necessary in the three and six months that were asked for by the inspectorate”.*¹⁶²

This was ultimately an issue for the Chief Constable, who is responsible for directing and controlling the force,¹⁶³ but it is also one of the Police and Crime Commissioner’s “key roles” to hold the Chief Constable to account.¹⁶⁴

30.4. In August 2016, as part of national recommendations for forces to review each other’s public protection arrangements, Lancashire Police carried out a peer review of Nottinghamshire Police. While it noted “real strength” within the staff and some “positive relationships” with social care, it also identified “significant concern regarding the staffing levels of the public protection team” and “staff dealing with child protection were under pressure and managing high levels of work, comments such as ‘we are waiting for something like baby P to happen’ ... appeared common place”.¹⁶⁵ This led to the creation of a multi-agency sexual exploitation panel and a cross-authority perpetrator panel,

¹⁵⁶ Peer reviews involve an evaluation by officers and specialists from another police force.

both attended by the “Police, Social Care and the Charitable/Voluntary sector”.¹⁶⁶ The force also restructured its Public Protection Department, dividing it into three thematic portfolios – (a) children – including the CAIU, child sexual exploitation internet abuse and ‘Working Together’ teams, (b) adults – including rape and domestic abuse, and (c) quality, compliance and strategy – to “Ensure the implementation of national best practices and recommendations from the various sources of scrutiny”.¹⁶⁷

30.5. In 2016, the HMIC PEEL report rated Nottinghamshire Police as ‘inadequate’ in its effectiveness in protecting vulnerable people from harm and supporting victims, a deterioration since the previous report.¹⁶⁸ The 2017 PEEL report rated the force as ‘requires improvement’ on protecting vulnerable people (although its overall assessment was ‘good’).¹⁶⁹ The Police and Crime Commissioner told us that he was “surprised, disappointed and more than a little irritated, in that it had been made very clear through a succession of HMIC reports that there needed to be improvements in this area.”¹⁷⁰

31. Chief Superintendent Robert Griffin of Nottinghamshire Police told us that the majority of the issues identified have now been addressed.¹⁷¹ In particular, a number of the difficulties faced by the force were connected to the “investment of resource into Public Protection. There is a lot of reference in these documents to child abuse being under-resourced, and we put that right.”¹⁷² The force, he said, now takes “a much more holistic approach to vulnerability”.¹⁷³ It also tracks all HMIC¹⁷⁴ recommendations, under the leadership of the Deputy Chief Constable. As at September 2018, there were 44 separate ongoing ‘actions’ in response to recommendations, covering eight areas, including children in care, investigations, child sexual exploitation and delay.¹⁷⁵

32. As at October 2018, the sexual abuse of children in care continued to be investigated by officers within the Public Protection Department, either by Operation Equinox (for non-recent abuse) or by the CAIU.¹⁷⁶ Nottinghamshire Police has a specific procedural guide on the investigation of sexual abuse¹⁷⁷ and the ‘Child Abuse Investigation Procedure PD513’,¹⁷⁸ as well as multi-agency procedures.

B.7: Crown Prosecution Service approach to allegations of child sexual abuse

Background to the Crown Prosecution Service

33. The Crown Prosecution Service is responsible for prosecuting cases investigated by the police in England and Wales.¹⁷⁹ It was established by statute, which set out that its functions included taking over the conduct of criminal proceedings instituted by the police, giving advice to the police, and instituting and having the conduct of criminal proceedings where appropriate.¹⁸⁰ It is independent of government and, as “an objective referral authority”, is only able to act on the information provided by the police.¹⁸¹ Its role is to make “independent and objective decisions about the prospect of a jury convicting of a criminal charge”.¹⁸²

34. Prior to the formation of the Crown Prosecution Service in 1986, the police were responsible for investigating most crime, deciding whether to prosecute and conducting the prosecution.¹⁸³ When the Crown Prosecution Service was established, it took on responsibility for deciding whether to prosecute and for conducting the prosecution¹⁸⁴ after the police had decided to charge a suspect.¹⁸⁵

35. Since 2004, the Crown Prosecution Service has made charging decisions¹⁸⁶ in all but minor cases.¹⁸⁷ It does so in accordance with The Code for Crown Prosecutors (the Code),¹⁸⁸ as well as its Guidelines on Prosecuting Cases of Child Sexual Abuse.¹⁸⁹ Prosecutors may authorise a charge or continue a prosecution against a suspect only where the ‘Full Code Test’ is passed,¹⁹⁰ that is:

- there is a realistic prospect of conviction and
- the public interest requires a prosecution.

Since 1986, in cases of sexual offences against children, where there is a realistic prospect of conviction then “there will seldom be any doubt that prosecution will be in the public interest”.¹⁹¹

36. There has been concern about the low number of prosecutions resulting from Operation Daybreak. Sue Matthews (the Crown Prosecution Service reviewing lawyer for Operation Equinox) explained that every case is different and must be considered individually.¹⁹² While it has been accused of ‘cherry picking’ cases to prosecute,¹⁹³ the Crown Prosecution Service “in a sense do have to cherry pick” as it is only those cases where the test is satisfied that can be prosecuted.¹⁹⁴

Decisions to prosecute

37. The factors that the Crown Prosecution Service takes into account when deciding whether to prosecute are set out in the Code¹⁹⁵ and in prosecution guidance.¹⁹⁶ Witnesses in this investigation referred to a number of considerations in cases of child sexual abuse:

37.1. Failure to disclose earlier: Ordinarily, the Crown Prosecution Service will not refuse to charge solely because a complainant has not disclosed their abuse previously. Allegations of non-recent and institutional abuse are “common” and there are “good reasons” why such cases do not come to light at the time.¹⁹⁷

37.2. Complainants’ previous convictions: Convictions must be disclosed to the defence and so may be used to allege that the complainant is dishonest or untruthful.¹⁹⁸ It is an “essential” part of the prosecution case to explain to the jury the circumstances behind any relevant offending by a complainant, which may be a reaction to abuse or because the complainant is under the influence of the abuser.¹⁹⁹

37.3. The credibility of children: Until 1994, juries were generally warned by the judge of the risk of convicting a suspect in cases of alleged sexual abuse based on a single complainant’s evidence, as the “credibility and credit of the child will often be of limited value”.²⁰⁰ However, since at least 2009, the evidence of a child has been regarded as no less reliable than that of an adult.²⁰¹

37.4. Corroboration: Although prosecutors should consider whether there is any credible evidence suggesting a false allegation, “prosecutors should guard against looking for ‘corroboration’ of the victim’s account or using the lack of ‘corroboration’ as a reason not to proceed with a case.”²⁰²

37.5. Mental health, drug and alcohol issues: The Crown Prosecution Service now recognises, in its guidance, that some complainants may have particular mental health vulnerabilities.²⁰³ Similarly, while drug or alcohol dependency may impact on a complainant’s ability to give evidence, the Crown Prosecution Service may still prosecute such a case.²⁰⁴

37.6. Previous sexual history: While it is not uncommon for records in historical cases to describe complainants as ‘promiscuous’, this should not now be a relevant factor in making a charging decision.²⁰⁵

²⁰⁴ Matthews 23 October 2018 46/10-19.

²⁰⁵ As recently as 2000, this was still used as a factor by the Crown Prosecution Service in a decision about whether to prosecute Dean Gathercole, a former residential care worker (CPS004387 para. 48), although since 1999 there has been a general prohibition on the admission of evidence of, and questions about, previous sexual history (CPS Guidance on Rape and Sexual Offences – Chapter 4: Section 41 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999).

37.7. Contemporaneous records: Prosecutors must ensure that complainants who have been in care are not disadvantaged by the fact that they will likely have a great deal of information recorded about them.²⁰⁶ Records or the absence of records need to be treated with caution.²⁰⁷ In non-recent abuse cases, records are often incomplete, though this should not be a bar to prosecution.²⁰⁸

37.8. Simultaneous civil claim: Complainants may bring a civil claim for the abuse at or around the same time that a criminal prosecution is being considered. Though the defence could question whether there is a financial motive for the disclosure, civil litigation should not impact on a charging decision unless there are substantial conflicts between the accounts given in the civil litigation and to the police.²⁰⁹

38. A decision not to prosecute (or to take no further action) does not mean that the abuse did not take place or that the Crown Prosecution Service has concluded that it did not happen. The question is whether or not the prosecutor could conclude that there was a realistic prospect of conviction, bearing in mind that the criminal standard of proof is high.²¹⁰ A second opinion may be obtained on decisions to take no further action or discontinue cases involving rape or serious sexual offences.²¹¹

39. After the Crown Prosecution Service decides (generally speaking) whether to authorise charges following allegations of child sexual abuse, it is the police who are responsible for informing complainants about the decision whether or not to prosecute.²¹² A complainant is entitled to a review of that decision.²¹³

40. It is possible for a decision to take no further action to be subsequently overturned, for example, if new evidence becomes available or if the original decision was “obviously wrong”.²¹⁴ This decision is made by a Chief Crown Prosecutor for the relevant area or, if made as a result of a challenge under the Victims’ Right to Review scheme, by a Deputy Chief Crown Prosecutor.²¹⁵ For example, the Crown Prosecution Service decided in 2006 to take no further action in relation to NO-A286’s allegations against Stephen Noy but, in 2014, this decision was overturned and charges authorised because there was additional evidence relating to the complainant’s mental health and another witness had come forward.²¹⁶

B.8: Operations Daybreak, Xeres and Equinox

41. Since 2010, Nottinghamshire Police has been investigating allegations that former residents of children’s homes in the City (Operation Daybreak) and County (Operation Xeres) were sexually and physically abused. These investigations were combined in 2015 into Operation Equinox.

Operation Daybreak

42. Following receipt of two civil claims by the Councils in December 2009 and June 2010, alleging physical abuse at Beechwood,²¹⁷ a multi-agency strategy meeting was held in August 2010²¹⁸ and Nottinghamshire Police's CAIU subsequently started an investigation. Initially, limited progress was made, although alleged victims and perpetrators were interviewed.

43. In June 2011, as a result of further allegations received,²¹⁹ Nottinghamshire Police initiated Operation Daybreak, a dedicated investigation into allegations of non-recent abuse at Beechwood from the 1960s onwards. All allegations of sexual abuse were to be investigated,²²⁰ but allegations of physical abuse were only to be pursued if the suspect still worked with children.²²¹ The investigation was extended in 2013 to include other City children's homes.²²² In terms of scale, there were approximately 15 allegations of sexual abuse made to Operation Daybreak in 2011, 20 in 2012, 20 in 2013 and 40 in 2014.²²³

44. However, evidence from witnesses involved in Operation Daybreak, and from reviews carried out at the time, suggest that its progress was hampered by three main issues:

44.1. The lack of a dedicated Senior Investigating Officer (SIO): Detective Inspector (DI) Yvonne Dales, the initial SIO of Operation Daybreak, retained responsibility for the CAIU at the same time.²²⁴ The lack of a full-time SIO to supervise and control the investigation on a day-to-day basis had a negative impact²²⁵ and it was not until January 2015 that a full-time dedicated SIO (DI Pete Quinn) was appointed.²²⁶

44.2. Staffing: Staffing levels were "at a minimum" from the outset.²²⁷ Concerns about the impact of insufficient resources were raised as early as September 2011²²⁸ and subsequently by team members and in independent reviews.²²⁹ An October 2014 peer review identified "current resources" as "insufficient to manage the demand".²³⁰ The Police and Crime Commissioner was aware that Operation Daybreak was under-resourced but was assured at the time by the Chief Constable that it was manageable.²³¹ However, Nottinghamshire Police now accepts that resourcing for the scale of the investigation was "wholly inadequate" and affected the "pace of the investigation".²³²

44.3. Attempt to scale down the investigation: Despite requests for more resources and the increasing numbers of allegations, senior officers requested in 2014 that the investigation be scaled down or even closed down.²³³ An external review in October 2015 recommended that the investigation should continue.²³⁴

Senior officers in Nottinghamshire Police should have ensured that the investigation was prioritised and adequately resourced.

45. There was “really, really helpful”²³⁵ early engagement between the police and the Crown Prosecution Service, with the reviewing lawyer also involved in providing early investigative advice such as whether to reinterview a complainant or which lines of enquiry needed to be followed.²³⁶ There was no overall policy about how cases were to be approached; each case was judged on its own merits.²³⁷ On completion of an individual investigation, the Operation Daybreak SIO assessed “whether the evidence available provided a reasonable suspicion that the offence had been committed”.²³⁸ If not, no further action was taken and the complainant was informed. If the test was passed, a comprehensive advice file was sent to the Crown Prosecution Service, which decided whether to charge based on the ‘Full Code Test’.²³⁹

46. A number of files were passed to the Crown Prosecution Service for a decision on whether to authorise charges. However, there were no prosecutions for sexual abuse during the lifespan of Operation Daybreak.²⁴⁰

46.1. In September 2012, the Crown Prosecution Service concluded that there were too many problems with each allegation against three suspects (NO-F2, NO-F1 and NO-F10), including concerns about collusion between complainants.²⁴¹

46.2. A single allegation against John Dent²⁴² did not proceed to charge in February 2013, due to inconsistencies with the dates of the alleged offence and issues of identification.

46.3. In June 2013, the Crown Prosecution Service determined there was no reasonable prospect of conviction in relation to NO-A86’s allegations of serious sexual abuse by staff members, and that her allegations of rapes and murders of residents by NO-F11 were “not true”.²⁴³

46.4. In June 2014, a decision was taken not to prosecute NO-F1 for sexual abuse at Beechwood and Ranskill Gardens.²⁴⁴

Operation Xeres

47. In 2014, Nottinghamshire Police received more than 10 allegations of non-recent abuse in relation to children’s homes in the County.²⁴⁷ In early 2015²⁴⁸ the force launched Operation Xeres to investigate allegations of non-recent abuse at nine children’s homes previously managed by the County.²⁴⁹ However, by June 2015, Operation Xeres had also stalled due to “staffing issues”.²⁵⁰

Operation Equinox

48. In August 2015, Operations Daybreak and Xeres were merged to form Operation Equinox,²⁵¹ in order to ensure a more consistent approach to investigating allegations and to amalgamate resources. In total, as at March 2018, 832 allegations of sexual or physical abuse had been made to Operation Equinox by 355 different complainants against 559 suspects, 63 of whom had died.²⁵²

49. In some cases, the police decided that no further action should be taken as the threshold for passing the case to the Crown Prosecution Service was not met.²⁵³ In others, the Crown Prosecution Service concluded there was no realistic prospect of conviction.²⁵⁴ There have been several successful prosecutions arising out of Operation Equinox.

49.1. Andris Logins was convicted in March 2016 of four counts of rape, 12 counts of indecent assault, and one count of child cruelty, related to his time as a residential care worker at Beechwood in the 1980s. He was sentenced to 20 years’ imprisonment.²⁵⁵ As he was a registered social worker at the time of his conviction, he was removed from the social work register.²⁵⁶

49.2. Barrie Pick, a former member of staff at Beechwood, was convicted in December 2017 of the sexual abuse of a male resident between 1976 and 1977, and was sentenced to six years’ imprisonment.²⁵⁷

49.3. Dean Gathercole was found guilty in May 2018 of six counts of indecent assault and three counts of rape at Amberdale in the 1980s. He was sentenced to 19 years’ imprisonment.²⁵⁸

49.4. Myriam Bamkin was sentenced to 30 months' imprisonment in June 2018 after pleading guilty to having sex with a 15-year-old male resident at Amberdale in 1985. In his sentencing remarks the judge noted that, although a member of staff reported the concerns at the time, "The head of the unit appeared to have told that member of staff to keep it to himself and it was swept under the carpet."²⁵⁹

49.5. Christopher Metcalfe, a former member of staff at Skegby Hall and a foster carer, was convicted in September 2018 and sentenced to two years and nine months' imprisonment for indecently assaulting two girls.²⁶⁰

49.6. David Gallop, a former social worker for the County, was sentenced in October 2018 to 21 months' imprisonment for sexually abusing a child in the 1970s when the child was placed at Hazelwood.²⁶¹

49.7. Michael Robinson was convicted in January 2019 of sexually abusing boys at Hazelwood in the 1980s and was sentenced to eight years' imprisonment.²⁶²

50. In May 2018, the police carried out an analysis to try to identify whether any collusion took place between suspects or offenders whilst working at Beechwood and whether any collusion could be considered to be a "Paedophile Ring".²⁶³ Six alleged or convicted offenders – John Dent, NO-F29, NO-F1, NO-F11, NO-F49 and NO-F2 – were reviewed.

"The combined results support the hypotheses that a small and limited level of collusion may have taken place between suspects but the evidence is not robust enough to support the existence of a Paedophile Ring."

As Chief Superintendent Griffin explained, some of the six suspects were working together at the same time and therefore had had the opportunity to act together. However, it was not possible to conclude that they had in fact done so.²⁶⁴

51. Operation Equinox remains ongoing.²⁶⁵ Chief Superintendent Griffin told us that Nottinghamshire Police has established a dedicated non-recent child abuse investigative team which will continue beyond the lifespan of Operation Equinox.²⁶⁶ It is unclear whether this will continue indefinitely or how it is to be structured.

Part C

C.1: Introduction

1. The investigation's first case study concerns Beechwood Children's Home, which was comprised of four units: The Lindens, Redcot, Enderleigh and a central administration and teaching block. The case study examines institutional responses to child sexual abuse and barriers to disclosure of allegations. It also considers the changing function of the home, the environment for the children resident there, and changing internal management arrangements.
2. A large number of allegations of sexual abuse have been made against members of staff at several children's homes across the County and City over a number of years.²⁶⁷ Beechwood was selected as a case study, amongst other reasons, because it had been the subject of an extensive police investigation and was also the subject of the largest number of allegations of sexual abuse by complainant core participants made to the Inquiry.

C.2: Allegations of abuse at Beechwood

3. Five witnesses gave their accounts of being sexually abused at Beechwood at our October 2018 hearings and around 35 other complainant core participants provided statements,²⁶⁸ a summary of which were read into the record. Additionally, 100 further accounts of sexual abuse were collated from police interviews, civil litigation claims and other records.²⁶⁹ Nottinghamshire Police recorded 166 allegations of sexual abuse at Beechwood between 1968 and 2005, the vast majority relating to abuse in the 1970s and 1980s.²⁷⁰

4. The range of abuse alleged at Beechwood includes the following:

4.1. A79 was in Beechwood twice in the 1960s and early 1970s. During each placement, he says he was raped by a member of staff.²⁷¹

4.2. P18 was placed for a “few nights” with her siblings in The Lindens between 1968 and 1970, when she was between five and 10 years old. She remembers being taken out of her bed at night by a male member of staff. She says she would be taken to another room where he would touch her all over her body and make her touch his groin. This happened several times.²⁷²

4.3. D10 was in Beechwood between 1971 and 1972. He alleges that he was taken from a dormitory in the middle of the night and brought to an office by a male member of staff where he was forced to the floor and raped.²⁷³

4.4. D7 was placed in Enderleigh for three weeks in 1977, aged 15. She says John Dent sexually assaulted her; in one incident he attempted to rape her, and in another she was digitally penetrated. Dent let D7 know that he had control over where she would go after Enderleigh, and she “felt very alone”.²⁷⁴

4.5. C21 was placed in The Lindens for nine months in 1977, when he was aged 14. He alleges that he was raped by NO-F29 in a laundry room and indecently assaulted by him in the showers. It made him feel “Sick, dirty and, ashamed. And fearful it might happen again.”²⁷⁵ NO-A320,²⁷⁶ D22²⁷⁷ and L50²⁷⁸ also allege that NO-F29 indecently assaulted them. D35²⁷⁹ alleges that NO-F29 was one of two members of staff who raped him. All were at Beechwood in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

4.6. L17 was placed in Redcot for almost a year in 1979, aged 11. She says she was raped by a member of staff, Colin Wallace, on “four or five occasions”. She also alleges she was made to masturbate Wallace when other staff were in the room so she thought they must have known what was going on. She described the impact after she left care, saying that people in the community “know you are damaged. So they find that it’s easier to groom you, and as soon as I came out of the children’s home that’s what I encountered.”²⁸⁰

4.7. N1 was placed in Beechwood in 1982 when aged 12. She was groomed and raped by Andris Logins, a member of staff.²⁸¹

4.8. L23 alleges that in 1984, when she was placed at Beechwood aged 16, she was raped in her bedroom “on around three occasions” and sexually assaulted in the communal toilets by Andris Logins: “He would pull me around, pin me down and suck my neck to give me love bites.”²⁸²

4.9. L27 was in Beechwood in 1994 to 1995. He alleges that he was forced to perform oral sex on multiple occasions as well as being indecently assaulted by NO-F363 and another staff member.²⁸³

4.10. L29 was placed in Beechwood for four months in 2005, when he was 15 years old. NO-F61, a male member of staff, allegedly forced him more than once to perform oral sex on him. Once, when L29 resisted, NO-F61 punched him in the face.²⁸⁴

4.11. In 2005, L51 alleged that NO-F7 behaved towards her in a “sexual manner” by rubbing himself against her on a number of occasions at Beechwood in 1985.²⁸⁵

5. Many complainants told us that, by giving their accounts of abuse, they wanted to ensure that the same did not happen to young people now in residential care.²⁸⁶

C.3: Residential care

Introduction

6. For the purposes of this report, we use ‘children’s homes’ or ‘residential care’ to refer to all residential children’s homes, including observation and assessment centres.²⁸⁷

7. In England, around 40 percent of children in care in the mid-1970s were placed in residential care.²⁸⁸ Numbers have continued to decline over the last 40 years, with 11 percent of all children in care in England in residential care by 2018.²⁸⁹ The capacity of a children’s home also reduced over time, from more than 10 in 1985 to fewer than seven by 1995. By 2016 the average was four.²⁹⁰ The age of those placed in residential care has progressively increased, so that by 2012 most children were over the age of 12.²⁹¹ From ²⁸⁶ For example, L48 (L48.4 October 2018 48/7-14) and D7 (D7.2 October 2018 102/5-6).

²⁸⁷ Children’s homes are more generally a subset of residential care, which has also included Approved Schools (which became Community Homes with Education), Observation & Assessment Centres (O&A Centres), Secure Units, speciality homes and others.

²⁸⁸ Residential Care in England, Sir Martin Narey, 2016, p6.

the 1980s, children in residential care tended to be older (over 10 years old). The policy was to place younger children in foster care.²⁹² These national trends are reflected in Nottinghamshire.²⁹³

8. In his report for the Inquiry,²⁹⁴ Professor David Berridge identified a number of related themes in the development of residential care in England, including:

- the stigma of being in care and the perception that children are in residential care somehow due to their own fault;
- residential care within children’s services “receiving less attention than it requires and its deficiencies remaining unaddressed for too long”;
- the professional and social isolation of residential care workers, with a lack of professional development resulting in “outdated, insensitive or harmful practices”;
- “very often, local government oversight of residential homes has been inadequate” and external oversight only gradually introduced; and
- the concentration of particularly vulnerable groups of older children and adolescents previously neglected and physically or sexually abused for “predatory men”.²⁹⁵

These themes are apparent throughout the Councils’ residential care provision, including at Beechwood.

Developments in residential care in the County and the City

9. Residential care provision by the Councils suffered from persistent problems over the years, including low staffing ratios, lack of qualifications and training, poor standards of accommodation, inadequate resources and insufficient external supervision.²⁹⁶

10. A 1975 report from the County’s children’s social care service found that children’s homes offered low levels of supervision and support to mostly “untrained” staff, who were in turn isolated. There were more children in residential care than there were beds. High numbers in care were said to be due to a “low level of preventative work”. Social workers did not have sufficient contact with children in children’s homes because they believed that children were “safe” once they were in care. Recommendations included training for residential care staff, and increased funding for both residential care and for preventative work.²⁹⁷

11. There were more than 200 unused places in County children’s homes by 1983. To reflect this fall in placements, an overall reduction in the number of residential places was proposed, including closing some homes and replacing them with specialist homes. The aim was to improve the quality of residential care by having fewer children in each home,²⁹⁸ providing a more effective service for those placed.²⁹⁹

12. By 1990, the County was “in the middle of a crisis in residential care”. There was high staff turnover, an increasing use of temporary staff due to recruitment difficulties, low levels of qualified staff and low staff morale. The contraction of the residential sector had led to the grouping together of children with serious problems.³⁰⁰ David White (the County’s Director of Social Services from 1989 to 1994) considered that by this point residential care had been operating at an unacceptable level for some time. The County was putting its “most vulnerable youngsters in the hands of those perhaps least qualified and able to care for them”.³⁰¹ Denis Watkins (the County’s Assistant Director of Social Services in the late 1980s and early 1990s) said that in the late 1980s the County aimed to have 10 percent of residential staff trained, demonstrating its “dire starting point”.³⁰²

13. Around this time there was an increasing understanding and awareness across England and Wales of the risks of sexual abuse committed by residential care staff. This was first acknowledged in national guidance Working Together in 1988,³⁰³ followed by more detailed guidance in 1991 to accompany the Children Act 1989³⁰⁴ and in a national review of residential care in 1991 by Sir William Utting.³⁰⁵

14. With anxiety growing among councillors, senior officers and residential care staff that existing provision of residential care was “failing to measure up to the demands being placed upon them”, the County established a Residential Child Care Working Party³⁰⁶ to review the County’s residential care.³⁰⁷ It produced a report in May 1992, ‘As if they were our own: Raising the Quality of Residential Child Care in Nottinghamshire’,³⁰⁸ which concluded that the County’s residential care was of an “unacceptable standard” and that some young people faced “the prospect of violence and sexual abuse within our care”.³⁰⁹ If the risk of children being sexually abused by residential care staff had not been apparent to the County’s children’s social care service from earlier disciplinary cases, it should have been as a result of this report.³¹⁰

15. The report made 79 recommendations.³¹¹ A team was formed in January 1993 to implement the recommendations.³¹² By March 1993 police checks before recruiting staff and procedures for complaints and reporting abuse were in place.³¹³ However, in January 1994, financial constraints were thought “likely to impact on the developments in residential care” being introduced. Despite this, plans were put in place to restructure community homes, including reducing the number of residential placements, increasing staffing ratios, and increasing investment in substitute family care.³¹⁴ A number of homes were closed by December 1994 and resources reinvested into “residential and alternative care”.³¹⁵

16. From 1998, when responsibility for residential care was divided between the Councils, the City introduced its own designated training programme for those working with children, including child protection training.³¹⁶ Between 1999 and 2001, a new training programme for staff in County children’s homes was introduced, including for working with children who had been sexually abused.³¹⁷

17. Both the County and the City made efforts in the early 2000s to “create a culture” that encouraged children in residential care to raise concerns,³¹⁸ including a complaints process, an advocacy service, social worker visits, councillor rota visits,³¹⁹ as well as the appointment of independent visitors.³²⁰ However, take-up of the complaints process was low, as noted by the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI):

“A number of young people we met said that they did not bother to complain, ‘as it didn’t get you anywhere’ and ‘nothing happened’. There was no evidence to confirm this was an accurate reflection of the situation but it is clearly a perception that the council will need to address.”³²¹

18. The City introduced a multi-agency placement panel by 2011 to consider the needs of children before placement and to keep placements under review.³²² Residential care had also been reconfigured to ‘small group’ homes in the City,³²³ leading to better outcomes for children in residential care.³²⁴ A serious case review in 2011 (following the suicide of a 15-year-old in the care of the City, discussed in Part E) recommended a programme to address deficiencies in the “identification, assessment and management of cases where there is emotional abuse, sexual abuse”. The “key priority for change” was to strengthen processes for children in care, including identification and management of safeguarding concerns, and profiling of high-risk children to ensure appropriate levels of support.³²⁵ In November 2011, the City introduced a Children in Care Profiling Tool to identify the most vulnerable children in care.³²⁶

19. By 2015, the County had implemented quality standards for children’s homes with improved levels of staff training, including mandatory training on child sexual exploitation.³²⁷

C.4: Background to Beechwood

20. The history of Beechwood demonstrates the extent to which the issues impacting on residential care more generally created an environment where vulnerable children could be and were abused, and faced difficulties in disclosing that abuse.

21. Allegations of abuse at Beechwood generally began to emerge in 2010 and were the catalyst for the police initiating Operation Daybreak in 2011. In 2012, 50 former residents of Beechwood brought civil claims in respect of their allegations of non-recent abuse at Beechwood.³²⁸

22. Despite a large number of allegations of sexual abuse by former residents, including from those who say they reported their allegations at the time, over the 39 years Beechwood was open there are only two recorded instances of an institutional response to allegations of sexual abuse made against staff. Colin Wallace was dismissed and convicted of unlawful sexual intercourse in 1980.³²⁹ NO-F47 resigned whilst under disciplinary investigation in 1998.³³⁰ As a result of allegations made to the police more recently there have been three convictions of former Beechwood staff members: John Dent in 2001,³³¹ Andris Logins in 2016³³² and Barrie Pick in 2017.³³³

23. Records and witnesses refer to 'the Beechwood complex', 'Beechwood', and to the various individual units (Redcot, The Lindens and Enderleigh). From 1996 the official name of the home was changed to '379 (or 387) Woodborough Road'.³³⁴ For consistency, we have referred to 'Beechwood' throughout this report.

C.5: Beechwood: 1967–1980

Composition and function

24. Beechwood opened on 1 November 1967³³⁵ as a one-unit "remand home for 20 boys".³³⁶ By 1976 it consisted of four units: The Lindens, Redcot (originally a separate children's home), Enderleigh (opened in 1967 as a remand home for 18 girls), and a central administration and teaching block.³³⁷ Enderleigh closed in 1978,³³⁸ leaving Beechwood with Redcot and The Lindens. In 1979, Redcot became a mixed unit,³³⁹ whilst The Lindens continued to be for boys only.

25. Beechwood was not intended to be a children's home for long-stay or short-stay placements. It was initially a remand home,³⁴⁰ then by 1974³⁴¹ an observation and assessment centre (O&A centre)³⁴² for children who had committed an offence and been remanded to the care of the local authority.³⁴³ In practice, emergency family placements would also be sent to Beechwood.

Map showing location of Beechwood units

25.1. As an O&A centre, its purpose was “to provide information as to the personality, social functioning, health, educational attainment of the child” to decide where they should be placed.³⁴⁴ At Beechwood, boys would be placed in The Lindens after being remanded from court. Following educational and psychiatric assessments and a case conference, a report would be provided to the court (ideally within six weeks), which would then decide whether to make a care order, with or without a placement decision. Boys would then be moved to Redcot, awaiting a long-term placement in a children’s home or in foster care. Where no placement decision had yet been made, ongoing reviews would take place to determine the appropriate placement. If placements failed, often the child would be returned to Beechwood,³⁴⁵ the effects of which, “cannot fail to be damaging”,³⁴⁶ as the County recognised in 1975.

25.2. In practice, Beechwood accommodated children on remand even after it ceased to be a remand home. It also had children placed on an emergency basis or awaiting long-term placement. This mixed cohort of children, with different challenges and needs and with ages ranging from 10 to 17 years old, produced “further tensions resulting in difficult and sometimes very aggressive behaviour”.³⁴⁷

25.3. Mark Cope (a residential care worker at Beechwood at the time) recalled the change from remand home to O&A centre “was really difficult ... people couldn’t forget the former role”³⁴⁸ and described Beechwood as a “holding unit” for children.³⁴⁹ As a result, there was a lack of opportunity to form any nurturing relationships with children.³⁵⁰ Staff at The Lindens complained to a senior manager in 1978: “How can you properly assess a child for court or placement procedure against a background which is a threat to many types of children?”³⁵¹

The nature of O&A centres, such as Beechwood, created a difficult environment for vulnerable children, who had different challenges and needs. Beechwood was more like a custodial institution, rather than a children’s home. It was a wholly unsuitable environment for children and young people, where sexual abuse thrived within a culture of physical violence and intimidation.

Management and governance

26. Beechwood was run by Nottingham Borough Council (the predecessor to the City) from 1967 until April 1974, when the County took over full responsibility for all children’s homes under local government reorganisation. As superintendent, Jim Saul oversaw the running of Beechwood until 1981.³⁵² He had a deputy superintendent, a post held by Ken Rigby from 1975 to 1993. Enderleigh, Redcot and The Lindens each had a housewarden who managed the unit on a day-to-day basis.³⁵³

27. A Homes Advisor (later a ‘Residential and Day Care Services Officer’) from children’s social care acted as a link between homes such as Beechwood and the local authority. Ken Rigby remembered that, throughout his time, “I don’t think we got a lot of support from ... social services ... We were very much left on our own”.³⁵⁴

Issues

Placements

28. In 1977, the Director of Social Services noted that “Over-accommodation is a frequent issue” with children staying “far longer than was appropriate or desirable”.³⁵⁵

29. Staff at The Lindens complained that their unit was being used as a placement for those rejected by other children’s homes. Boys were placed:

*“without considering the effect of such placement ... for example we have a sexual offender and suspect psychopath of 16 in the same unit as a weak inadequate 11 year old boy placed by his mother ... the contradictory nature of this situation is a negation of child care ... What is intended for the placement of the authority’s difficult children?”*³⁵⁶

30. Placement of vulnerable children alongside children who had exhibited harmful sexual behaviour without proper safeguards in place was a recurring issue at Beechwood throughout its existence.³⁵⁷ Ken Rigby recalled that staff thought Beechwood was used as a “dumping ground”, taking “anybody that was disruptive in any sort of community home in Nottinghamshire. We had no say on who should come, and, therefore, we had to take all comers, and that could be extremely disruptive”.³⁵⁸ Jim McLaughlin, a trainee residential care worker at Beechwood from 1979 to 1980, remembered separate areas had to be organised to avoid physical confrontation.³⁵⁹ Mark Cope recalled that victims of sexual abuse and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour would be placed together, “it was horrendous”.³⁶⁰

Staff

31. Staff at Beechwood were largely unqualified and untrained in caring for vulnerable children. Until 1979, Ken Rigby was one of only two professionally qualified residential staff.³⁶¹ Even by the mid-1990s, there was still no mandatory training programme for residential care staff.³⁶²

Culture

32. Many accounts of those who worked or visited Beechwood during this period were critical of its culture and environment. One member of staff thought that girls were never listened to or believed.³⁶³ Another described The Lindens as “strict and aggressive ... the place was difficult to work at”, whereas Redcot was “softer” and more like a children’s home.³⁶⁴ Margaret Stimpson, a senior social worker at the time, found Beechwood to be “rigid, regimented, punitive and uncaring”.³⁶⁵ Rod Jones recalled Enderleigh as an “awful place”³⁶⁶ and on one unannounced visit he found all the girls locked-in upstairs.³⁶⁷

³⁵⁶ NSC000457_3-4

³⁵⁷ It was subsequently raised as an issue preventing admission of a child in November 1989 (NSC000444_5-6), and again arose in the 2000s.

33. From a resident's perspective, L17 described open violence towards residents by staff³⁶⁸ and found some of the other residents to be "highly sexual", recalling that there was "a lot of bullying".³⁶⁹ C21's first impression of The Lindens aged 14 in 1977 was "fear".³⁷⁰ Others give accounts of being beaten and not having anyone to whom they could report.³⁷¹

34. Ken Rigby did recognise, reluctantly, that "a major part of the problem" was staff attitudes towards the children placed in the home.³⁷² As Mark Cope told us: "the way that Beechwood was managed, you were almost made to feel that they were objects ... we never actually saw an individual child, it was what they'd done wrong".³⁷³

Reports of and responses to allegations of sexual abuse

35. Officers working on Operation Daybreak concluded that Beechwood was "riddled with abuse" from the late 1960s to the late 1980s,³⁷⁴ with serious sexual abuse being most prevalent in the 1970s.³⁷⁵ Nottinghamshire Police recorded around 95 allegations of sexual abuse occurring at Beechwood between 1967 and 1980.³⁷⁶ The abuse included rape, buggery, sexual assault, and being inappropriately touched or watched in the showers.

John Dent

36. John Dent worked at The Lindens from December 1973 to March 1975 and then as deputy housewarden at Enderleigh from March 1975 to June 1977, where he was the only male member of staff.³⁷⁷ Following allegations that he had taken children to his room and caned them, Dent was investigated and he resigned in August 1978.³⁷⁸

37. In 1997, D7 reported to the police that she had been sexually abused by Dent.³⁷⁹ During the police investigation that followed, 'Operation Harpoon', several other complainants alleged abuse by Dent at Enderleigh and Hillcrest. In January 2001, John Dent stood trial on 26 counts involving eight complainants, six of whom alleged abuse at Enderleigh, including D7. He was acquitted on some counts and the jury was unable to return a verdict on others. After a retrial, Dent was convicted in January 2002 of sexual abuse, including indecent assault and attempted buggery, of four complainants, mostly relating to his time at Enderleigh.³⁸⁰

38. Ken Rigby recalled finding Dent in the TV room at Enderleigh "sitting on a settee with a girl either side of him, and he had his arms across their shoulders ... he wasn't embarrassed, he made no attempt to sort of jump up ... he was the only male in the room". The girls were 14 or 15 years old. Ken Rigby's response was to warn Dent that he was "giving mixed messages to the girls ... He was very popular with the group. They liked him".³⁸¹ He said:

“Some of the girls in Redcot were very promiscuous, and to see how they operated around boys in the unit. Male members of staff had to be very careful and give the girls plenty of leeway, as I could put it.”³⁸²

The focus was on the risk to staff, rather than considering the welfare of the child and the risk of abuse to which they were exposed. As a senior member of staff, Ken Rigby would have been responsible, to a large extent, for the tone set for others at Beechwood.

Colin Wallace

39. Colin Wallace started working at Beechwood in 1978 as a residential care worker.³⁸³ Some members of staff had concerns about his contact with girls at the home.³⁸⁴ Mark Cope remembers seeing a resident, NO-A533, leaving a note for Wallace asking him to meet up with her. Mark Cope said he took the note to Ken Rigby, who instructed him to put it back and to keep an eye on Wallace. He again raised concerns when he saw a second note.³⁸⁵ Ken Rigby denied that he was told about a note.³⁸⁶

40. NO-A533 was moved by children’s social care to another home in December 1980 close to where Wallace lived. When she absconded from her new placement a few days later, she was found at Wallace’s home.³⁸⁷ Wallace admitted having sexual intercourse with NO-A533 and was dismissed in December 1980.³⁸⁸ His dismissal was reported to councillors.³⁸⁹ Wallace was charged with four counts of unlawful sexual intercourse and convicted in 1981.³⁹⁰

41. Ken Rigby said there was discussion amongst staff about how Wallace had been able to carry out his assaults but also “as to the girl ... in terms of her advancing towards Mr Wallace”.³⁹¹ One staff member had said that NO-A533 “sought attention from any male member of staff who was on duty at that time”.³⁹² When asked what internal steps were taken to reduce risks following the conviction, Ken Rigby said:

“it was just reiterated once more that [male staff] had to be extremely careful – around young female[s], how they presented themselves to young female[s], and this was the main thing.”³⁹³

42. While there were no specific procedures directed at how to respond to allegations of sexual abuse against staff at the time,³⁹⁴ the 1978 Policy and Procedure Guide required all suspicions or complaints regarding abuse of residents to be reported to children’s social care.³⁹⁵ We have seen no evidence of Mark Cope’s concerns being reported to anyone within children’s social care. As with the response to Dent, Ken Rigby focused on the risks to staff rather than those to children.³⁹⁶

Barrie Pick

43. Barrie Pick was a residential care worker at Beechwood between 1976 and 1977.³⁹⁷ Mark Cope told us that he raised concerns with his manager, NO-F204, that Pick seemed attracted to the younger children in the home, but that these were not taken seriously. He felt there was generally a failure on the part of management to support staff when they raised concerns.³⁹⁸ In 2017, Pick was convicted of indecent assault and gross indecency against a former resident of Beechwood, and of possessing indecent images.³⁹⁹

NO-F29

44. A police analysis in January 2018 recorded that 33 former residents made allegations of sexual abuse against NO-F29, a senior member of staff at The Lindens who worked at Beechwood from 1967 until his death in 1980.⁴⁰⁰ The allegations included voyeurism, fondling children in the showers, digital penetration and rape.⁴⁰¹ Had he been alive, NO-F29 would have been the subject of serious criminal charges.⁴⁰²

45. There is no record of NO-F29 being reported to the police or investigated by children's social care during his lifetime.⁴⁰³ A social worker visiting Beechwood in 1979 reported that two residents:

*"were accusing him of homosexual activities. I interviewed [NO-A629] about this but all [NO-A629] said was that everybody knew that [NO-F29] was 'queer'. Mr Rigby was there as well and it was felt that there was nothing in these accusations at all apart from trying to diminish [NO-F29's] authority in the place. It was a very difficult time for Beechwood, the group was unsteady and [NO-A629] seemed to be in the middle of all the trouble that was going on."*⁴⁰⁴

46. Ken Rigby said that he had heard comments about NO-F29 being "queer" more than once but was told by Jim Saul that they were just rumours with no foundation. He accepted this.⁴⁰⁵ Jim McLaughlin had concerns about NO-F29 working with vulnerable children but said he would not have known who to tell given NO-F29's seniority.⁴⁰⁶ As noted in a police report in 2015, the senior role held by NO-F29 over a long period placed him in a unique position both to abuse residents and to have influence over other staff.⁴⁰⁷

47. NO-F204 held a senior role at Redcot in the mid-1970s.⁴⁰⁸ Initially he was dismissed for, amongst other things, watching children in the shower and physically assaulting residents but this was substituted on appeal to councillors with a final written warning and NO-F204 was redeployed to Hazelwood.⁴⁰⁹ At least six former Beechwood residents have now alleged sexual abuse by NO-F204.⁴¹⁰

48. Mark Cope remembered NO-F204 standing in the shower area when children were showering rather than supervising from outside. He reported his misgivings to Jim Saul who dismissed his concerns at the time. This discouraged him from reporting “anybody again”.⁴¹¹

Other allegations

49. The Inquiry is aware of six allegations of sexual abuse against NO-F49,⁴¹² and allegations against NO-F52,⁴¹³ NO-F281, NO-F60 and NO-F218, all of whom worked at Beechwood between 1967 and 1980.⁴¹⁴ There are also numerous allegations made against perpetrators who could not be identified by complainants.⁴¹⁵

50. For those residents who were able to report sexual abuse at the time, the response was generally negative. L24, NO-A451 and NO-A187 disclosed to members of staff but said nothing was done. NO-A320 alleged he was beaten by night staff after telling them that he had been sexually assaulted by a member of staff. L18 said he reported the abuse to the police but was told that they could not get involved and that he would have to report the abuse to someone else. L50 disclosed abuse to a school teacher working at the home; he recalled her simply responding “did he?” and that nothing then happened. L17 told us she disclosed to a staff member at her next placement but there was no response.⁴¹⁶

51. A social worker visiting in the late 1970s remembered, “there was lots of abuse reported in Beechwood and numerous complaints from children within the home. It was awful and the children often ran off to escape it.”⁴¹⁷

Barriers to disclosure

52. Other complainants who made allegations about this period were not able to disclose at the time they were abused.⁴¹⁸

52.1. D37 explained “The main reason that I didn’t report the abuse was that I didn’t realise it was wrong ... Even if I had wanted to report the abuse ... who would have believed me? The staff at Beechwood were members of the community and I was just a kid.”

52.2. D22 said that “The abuse I suffered has always been a source of shame and embarrassment for me. The thought of talking about it has been and still is very frightening.”

52.3. D35 “heard that it happened to others in the dorm, but we just kept our heads down and carried on. The lads just accepted what it was ... I had a record of previous convictions and knew that no one would believe me. I was also scared as I knew I would get beaten if I reported.”

52.4. A79 said that his perpetrator told him it was their “secret” and that, if anyone found out, he would make A79’s life hell and make it “twice as bad” next time.

“There was no way I was going to tell anyone as I was scared and sure that no-one would believe me and was deeply ashamed. By this point my whole personality was being built on me being a tough guy and so I was too ashamed to tell anyone.”

52.5. NO-A172 wanted to get a good report at Beechwood so that he did not have to stay there.

53. A number of former residents said that there was nobody to talk to about the abuse,⁴¹⁹ whereas others told of reporting to their social worker.⁴²⁰ It never occurred to Ken Rigby that residents might want to talk to someone other than their social worker.⁴²¹

54. Children were exposed to sexual and physical abuse and were isolated and fearful. They had no one in whom they could confide. Viewed by staff working there as a “dumping ground”, Beechwood was neglected by senior managers, particularly Edward Culham (Director of Social Services) and Norman Caudell (Divisional Director for children’s social care in the relevant local area), and councillors in both Councils.

Composition and function

55. By 1989, Beechwood had been re-designated as a community home⁴²² following a recommendation in a County report into residential care in 1984.⁴²³ It was to continue to provide 37 places, with children aged 10–18 to be placed “normally” for less than six months.⁴²⁴ Each child was to have a designated key worker who would be “the primary care person for the child”.⁴²⁵ In line with the County’s plan to reduce the number of children in residential care, The Lindens closed in 1990. From then, Beechwood consisted of only one residential unit: Redcot.⁴²⁶ During the 1990s, resident numbers varied between 11 and 17.⁴²⁷

56. Beechwood was officially described in 1993 as “a specialist children’s home which takes all young people remanded from the youth court who are refused bail”, taking in children “without notice”.⁴²⁸ In reality, in addition to those on remand, it continued to take children with challenging behaviour from other homes as well as taking those in “general welfare care”.⁴²⁹

Management and governance

57. Jim Saul retired in 1981, and Jim Fenwick ran Beechwood as Principal until 1991, although he told us he had “minimal” contact with children in the home.⁴³⁰ In around 1984, Hazel Kerr (Homes Advisor) wrote that:

*“Beechwood is slowly evolving under the firm guidance of Jim Fenwick ... It is well accepted that Beechwood will take on all-comers. They rarely, if ever reject a child.”*⁴³¹

Jim Fenwick recalled that, when he started, Beechwood staff were “a very much male-dominated group” but he “tried over a fairly long period to change this”⁴³² by appointing more female staff. He said that he made staff aware of the need to use sympathy and empathy with children but recognised that he was dependent on what he was told by staff as to how children were in fact being treated.⁴³³

58. He also attempted to improve physical conditions at Beechwood, writing in 1989 to Denis Watkins to “elicit ... support for urgent attention to ... improve the quality of life” of children at Beechwood, adding that staff were in a state of “desperation”.⁴³⁴ He referred to a visitor who had described it as “horrifying ... how is it we can place young people in such atrocious conditions?” Significant criticisms were still being made of physical conditions in the late 1990s and early 2000s.

59. Following Jim Fenwick’s departure, Beechwood was run by a series of temporary managers before Andrew Bosworth’s appointment as unit manager in 1995.⁴³⁵ He considered the management culture at Beechwood prior to his arrival had been one of “autocracy and intimidation” and that there had been “avoidance of issues”.⁴³⁶

60. The Inquiry has not seen evidence of any internal inspection of Beechwood during the 1980s by the County’s children’s social care service.

61. Annual reports into each children’s home were required throughout England and Wales from 1991 onwards and within the County these were conducted by the Service Standards Unit (SSU) from 1994.⁴³⁷ Although we have no SSU reports into Beechwood whilst it was run by the County, it appears that inspections were carried out.⁴³⁸

62. Also from 1991, monthly Regulation 22 inspection reports were required to be carried out by children’s social care staff and reported to councillors.⁴³⁹ However, as Professor Berridge noted, “local authorities were left to their own devices about what happened to these reports, how effective were they and whether they were followed-up.”⁴⁴⁰ Reports on Beechwood from the early to mid-1990s regularly assessed standards of management and care as high,⁴⁴¹

despite poor physical conditions,⁴⁴² severe staff shortages,⁴⁴³ and the criticisms from the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI)⁴⁴⁴ and media reports. Many of the positive Regulation 22 reports were prepared by County Service Manager Paul Bohan, who had direct responsibility for the management of Beechwood.

63. Children’s social care internal policy on Regulation 22 visits was revised in 1996, from that point requiring that any allegation of abuse made during the inspection be specifically recorded, and that inspection visits had to be unannounced and conducted by someone without line management responsibility for the home.⁴⁴⁵ By mid-1996, inspection reports began to refer to some of the difficulties facing Beechwood. One noted that whilst “great strides have been made in improving the systems and infrastructure in managing the Unit ... attention needs to be given to raising the quality of child care”.⁴⁴⁶ Another, in 1997, referred to children sharing three beds to a room “putting them at risk”, staff standing guard “to enable a female resident to be safe whilst using the shower”, and “chronic” staff shortages with the unit depending mainly on temporary staff.⁴⁴⁷

64. Reports also recorded the continued high numbers of children absconding each month.⁴⁴⁸ A 1997 report recorded 73 incidents of children missing in one month, but said “The Managers within the Unit and staff work closely with the local Police Officer ... and all young people are rated as to their risk of vulnerability.”⁴⁴⁹

65. From 1981 to 1998 only four reports of councillors’ rota visits are available in relation to Beechwood, all of which date between 1996 and 1998.⁴⁵⁰ No issues were identified in three of the reports.⁴⁵¹ A January 1998 report noted that there was “a serious problem with safety of staff” as well as with the safety of “inmates” (referring to residents).⁴⁵²

66. We have seen no evidence of the SSI, or any other external agency, carrying out an inspection into Beechwood between 1967 and 1998.⁴⁵³

Issues

Absconding

67. In late 1985 and early 1986, Beechwood attracted local and national media interest. There were reports of 400 incidents of absconding in 1985 (including 70 girls who had “fled” the home more than once in a year),⁴⁵⁴ a girl’s death following a fall from a window at the home⁴⁵⁵ and a trial during which it emerged that girls at Beechwood had been working in a “sex club”.⁴⁵⁶

⁴⁵³ During this time there was no regime for regular inspections, but the Department of Health and SSI sometimes conducted inspections of homes (NSC001235 paras. 8a.11-8a.12). Although, as discussed below, the SSI did have some oversight of the response to the death of a resident at Beechwood in 1994, no inspections were carried out.

68. This brought Beechwood to the attention of the County’s Social Services Committee. Committee Chair Joan Taylor, while recognising there was a problem with absconding and the risk of sexual exploitation, suggested that *“Often girls sent to us come with a history of being involved in prostitution.”*⁴⁵⁷

69. Jim Fenwick did not examine the underlying reasons for absconding,⁴⁵⁸ whilst Ken Rigby told us that girls “absconded for all sorts of reasons”.⁴⁵⁹ For Ken Rigby, some children at Beechwood were *“very devious in all sorts of things. Absconding was just but one of them.”*⁴⁶⁰

70. In March 1989, a national newspaper published an account of underage sex and drugs at Beechwood. David White reported to the Social Services Committee in April 1989 that the suggestion that there was “extensive sexual activity amongst couples and groups of young people” had been “grossly exaggerated”.⁴⁶¹ Although a 14-year-old girl had had sex with a number of boys on different occasions, White emphasised that “At no time did this take part against her will”. White’s report was seen as a vindication of the staff: “we were all quite delighted to receive the inquiry report and your letter that both contained a consistent underlying theme of exoneration”.⁴⁶² David White told us that he was *“ashamed by this report ... in terms of the way that we, as an organisation, reported this matter ... and sought to justify what we found.”*⁴⁶³ The focus of the report was on the difficulties faced by the staff rather than on the vulnerability of the children.

71. Concerns arose again in June 1994 following the death of a Beechwood resident after he absconded and crashed a car.⁴⁶⁴ The SSI criticised the high level of absconding at Beechwood, and one SSI official noted “there could be a case for saying that Nottingham had failed to protect the welfare of the children in their care”.⁴⁶⁵ Later that year an SSI official commented that *“It is now 4 months since [the child] was killed and it seems to me that nothing has been done during this period to protect the well-being of the other young people who are being looked after by Nottingham.”*⁴⁶⁶

72. Several complainants described physical abuse and a culture of violence at Beechwood in the 1980s and 1990s.⁴⁶⁷ For example, N1⁴⁶⁸ and other complainants⁴⁶⁹ say they were made to fight one another, although Ken Rigby and Mark Cope told us that staff organised boxing matches and no child was forced to fight.⁴⁷⁰ Some said that this culture prevented them from reporting sexual abuse either because they were scared of the repercussions⁴⁷¹ or because they were not believed when they reported physical abuse so did not think they would be believed about sexual abuse.⁴⁷² D33 described staff as “very cruel”, while D34 described physical abuse as “normal”. L22 described physical abuse from staff and other residents, and said she “told the nice staff about the beatings and what was happening, but they didn’t seem to care”.⁴⁷³

73. Concerns around the physically abusive environment at Beechwood were also raised by residents at the time. In 1987, a number of children complained to a member of the public about physical abuse at Beechwood and this came to the attention of children’s social care. Jim Fenwick “completely” denied that staff had been taking “children or young people into the office and slapping and knocking them around without witnesses” and emphasised “that this behaviour would be totally unacceptable ... and does not happen”.⁴⁷⁴ In correspondence with children’s social care, Jim Fenwick defended his staff’s use of “the necessary amount of force to restrain” one resident, whilst recognising that one member of staff had dealt with another resident “in a manner that was not entirely necessary”. He claimed staff had “little or no preparation or training for dealing with situations that become physical”.⁴⁷⁵ Within children’s social care, it was noted that “residential staff are constantly vulnerable given the numbers of confrontations which take place in any working day. We are of course placed in the position of requiring appropriately to investigate any allegations made ... Mr Fenwick is quite understanding of the fact that we need to fully investigate incidents that are alleged”.⁴⁷⁶

74. There are also recorded examples of allegations against staff of physical abuse. In 1993, NO-F3, a care worker at Beechwood, was suspended following allegations of physical assault of a resident.⁴⁷⁷ He was charged but a prosecution was dropped in March 1994, and NO-F3 returned to work three months later.⁴⁷⁸ In September 1995, two residents made complaints of physical abuse by staff. One said that he was physically assaulted by NO-F1, who held a senior position. Another complained that a member of staff had held his face and dragged him into the office.⁴⁷⁹ It is not clear how these incidents were dealt with, if at all.

75. Andrew Bosworth became Unit Manager in 1995. He found that there were no restraint or incidents books kept at Beechwood, and no systems on restraint “evident in the unit at all”.⁴⁸⁰ He was particularly concerned about the attitudes of staff, in particular one individual who had a conviction for grievous bodily harm and who had apparently declared “We sort people out at Beechwood”. These issues should have been picked up sooner by senior staff members and social care management.

76. Former staff denied a culture of physical violence at Beechwood. Ken Rigby said he had never had to reprimand a member of staff for their misuse of physical restraint or contact with residents in 18 years⁴⁸¹ and said it was children who were violent to staff and between themselves.⁴⁸² Jim Fenwick told us he never saw a member of staff being physically abusive to a child, although he remembered dealing with a complaint about a member of staff who had threatened to hit a resident with a billiard cue.⁴⁸³ For Mark Cope, the environment at Beechwood was hostile but not violent, and he recalled the home being far more relaxed in the 1980s than previously.⁴⁸⁴

77. However, as part of a 2011 review looking at allegations of physical and sexual abuse at Beechwood in the late 1980s, the NSPCC concluded:

“It is ... clear from the file material that Beechwood, and particularly The Lindens, was an environment where violence, bullying and fear were common features and recording suggests that such behaviour was expected ... The Lindens would certainly appear to have been an environment within which an abusing adult would be able to abuse young people successfully.”⁴⁸⁵

Reports of and responses to allegations of sexual abuse

78. Police records include more than 65 allegations of sexual abuse against staff at Beechwood between 1981 and 1998.⁴⁸⁶ Jim Fenwick told us that he was “absolutely shocked” at the number of allegations during his time in charge and had “no idea” how they could have taken place. He said that he should have known what was happening in relation to “the abuse of children”.⁴⁸⁷ This was a serious management failure that left children unprotected.

79. L27 said he reported being sexually abused to the police but:

“was told to stop lying, and that I was making it up. They just didn’t seem interested at all. I don’t think they believed me, but I find it hard to believe that they didn’t know what was happening in the home.”⁴⁸⁸

80. D4 was not able to disclose:

“I didn’t think anyone could help me. No one had ever helped me before ... Staff know you have no family and nobody cares about you and there is nobody to turn to. That’s why you are there in the first place. You’re vulnerable. You’ve got no family, so who’s going to care?”⁴⁸⁹

81. In 2005, NO-A93 alleged that NO-F7 sexually assaulted her in 1985. The allegations were investigated by the County under its disciplinary procedures as NO-F7 was working in education at the time of the allegations. However, the County decided that the allegations should not proceed to a disciplinary hearing against NO-F7.⁴⁹⁰

⁴⁹⁰ It was considered that there was insufficient evidence based on interviews with witnesses and a lack of supporting records (NSC000501).

Andris Logins

82. Andris Logins, who worked in Redcot from 1980 to 1985, was convicted in 2016 of four counts of rape, 12 counts of indecent assault and one count of child cruelty in relation to four children at Beechwood from 1980 to 1984. He was sentenced to 20 years in prison. His lawyer said that Logins had been “suckered into a regime he became part of”.⁴⁹¹ Logins was struck off as a social worker in April 2017.⁴⁹²

83. In 1991, charges against Logins for indecent assault of residents at another children’s home, Sycamore House, were discontinued by the police. Children’s social care took no further internal action and he was reinstated in October 1991⁴⁹³ without any assessment of whether he posed a risk to children.⁴⁹⁴

84. In 2011, NO-A155 made allegations of sexual abuse against a “Mr Logan”, but the police did not connect this to Andris Logins until 2015.⁴⁹⁵ It was another former resident, NO-A61, who came forward in 2013 following press reports, who prompted a police investigation and others subsequently came forward.

85. Mark Cope remembered Logins being tactile with girls who would sit on his knee.

“That was actually done in front of management and anybody else who was around. He didn’t hide what he was doing.”

He did not report this behaviour as he felt there was no clear evidence of wrongdoing, but now realised that this could be described as grooming behaviour.⁴⁹⁶ Ken Rigby admitted to us that a blind eye was “probably” turned towards the way Logins behaved, adding, “but I have got no knowledge of that”. He grudgingly accepted that in his management role he too was responsible for what happened to children.⁴⁹⁷

Other allegations

86. Although Andris Logins is the only conviction in relation to this period at Beechwood, eight former residents made allegations to Operation Daybreak of non-recent sexual abuse by NO-F1 and four former residents made allegations against NO-F2, in relation to their employment at Beechwood between 1987 and 2000 and 1985 and 2002 respectively.⁴⁹⁸ Both are also the subject of a substantial number of allegations of physical abuse.

87. NO-F11 worked at Beechwood for 19 years and died in 2012. He was the subject of allegations of sexual abuse from four former residents relating to the 1980s and 1990s.⁴⁹⁹ We are also aware of allegations of sexual abuse against other members of staff relating to this period, including NO-F4, NO-F3, NO-F287, NO-F33, NO-F14, NO-F8, NO-F363, NO-F6 and others who could not be identified by complainants.⁵⁰⁰

⁴⁹¹ Andris Logins jailed for Nottinghamshire children’s home sex abuse. 23.03.16

⁴⁹² INQ001154. The HCPC decided that his fitness to practice as a social worker was impaired following the conviction.

⁴⁹³ On the basis that “it was felt that the available evidence, despite the best efforts to clarify the situation, finally remained inconsistent and unreliable”. Logins’ request to be redeployed outside the residential child care sector was rejected because there were “no formal grounds to do so”. (NSC000488_14:15).

88. Despite the large number of allegations made to police and to this Inquiry in relation to this period, there are no records of allegations of sexual abuse made at the time. Several former residents say that they disclosed abuse at the time but were not believed.⁵⁰¹ P14 says she reported abuse to staff but was told that no one would believe her as she was regarded as a suicide risk. P12 says she reported to a member of staff at her next placement, but was told to “piss off to bed”. NO-A188 said she told a staff member who believed her but told her that if she said anything “you will make matters worse for yourself”.

89. Children continued to be exposed to physical and sexual abuse. There was a culture of violence and a lax attitude to absconding. Staff ignored the abuse of children by colleagues, whilst managers did not act to protect children. Senior managers clearly viewed Beechwood as a problem, in which the interests of staff were of greater concern than the protection of vulnerable children and young people.

C.7: Continuing problems under the control of the City: 1998–2006

90. The recently created City Council assumed the ownership and management of Beechwood in April 1998. Andrew Bosworth, who continued as manager during this change, felt that for a considerable period, senior staff were preoccupied with their own concerns for their future, and did not have any understanding of the unsettling effect on frontline staff.⁵⁰²

91. Around this time, the majority of placements at Beechwood, for 13 children aged 14 to 17 who had been bailed or remanded to care, were still “unplanned” and at short notice. Staff “felt that young people were safe while in the unit ... but felt that young people were at risk when out of the unit”.⁵⁰³ However, for Margaret Mackechnie, the City’s Assistant Director for Children’s Services, with senior line management responsibility for the home, Beechwood reflected a “youth justice approach ... less caring ... male dominated ... there was a harshness about it”.⁵⁰⁴ In spite of being aware of this at the time, Ms Mackechnie did not do enough to improve conditions at Beechwood.

92. Inspections and reviews of Beechwood were largely negative, making adverse comments about the lack of policies, procedures and training for staff and the physical conditions of Beechwood.⁵⁰⁵ The number of children sharing rooms was “unacceptable”, and the standard of accommodation was “very poor”, which had been “well documented in previous reports”.⁵⁰⁶

93. In the early 2000s, Beechwood faced the same problems that it had over the past 20 years. Alison Michalska, the City’s Corporate Director for Children and Adults, told us that Beechwood should have been closed when the City took over ownership in 1998.⁵⁰⁷ It continued to be over capacity and the mix of “aggressive and loud to vulnerable and subdued” residents was considered difficult to manage.⁵⁰⁸

94. In 2001, the City’s Registration and Inspection Unit identified 29 issues requiring attention at Beechwood, including addressing overcrowding, urgently reviewing placements to ensure they were appropriate and that children could be protected from bullying and other forms of abuse, and providing child protection training (which had also been identified in a previous review).⁵⁰⁹

95. Michelle Foster, a residential care worker at Beechwood between 2000 and 2002, told us that it was not “an optimistic place” for children to be.⁵¹⁰ Despite concerns raised in inspection reports about the lack of child protection training, she said that no training was provided on working with children who had been sexually abused or on dealing with sexualised behaviour.⁵¹¹

96. Although sharing bedrooms had been identified as a “risk” in 1997⁵¹² and “unacceptable” in 1999,⁵¹³ it was still happening in 2002. Joanne Walker (who had been seconded to manage Beechwood) identified this as a “grave concern”:

*“I am aware of a previous incident of rape being perpetrated in another home with just such a situation, indeed, within the last week a young man who was placed in a shared room was urinated on whilst in bed! The horror of this happening is unspeakable. How can we give care to anyone who has been so abused by a system which allowed this to happen? ... Sharing bedrooms is a source of constant friction between the young people resulting in unnecessary dangers. It is a disaster in the making and only a matter of time before a tragedy happens. I would go so far as to say this practise constitutes institutional abuse.”*⁵¹⁴

Margaret Mackechnie disagreed that the sharing of rooms was “institutional abuse”, but accepted that it was “not good practice in a children’s home”.⁵¹⁵

Bronwen Cooper report: 2001

97. Bronwen Cooper, an Investigation Officer with the City, was asked to investigate allegations and counter-allegations concerning NO-F1, a former staff member of Beechwood now working in another home, relating to the period from the mid-1990s to 2001.⁵¹⁶ Ms Cooper said her remit was to consider “the whole operation of the unit, the culture and practice ... and whether children felt safe”.⁵¹⁷

98. Her 2001 report revealed serious concerns of a staff culture of “sexual banter” and harassment at Beechwood.⁵¹⁸ She listed 10 specific allegations against staff, including an “inappropriate relationship” between NO-F1 and “a young person in the Unit”. The report described a “‘macho’ environment”, sexual and racial harassment and inappropriate behaviour between staff.

99. Ms Cooper “was extremely concerned that the care of the children in this situation was being neglected” and that the behaviour of staff, particularly the sexualised behaviour, “would have an impact on children that we knew had previously suffered physical/sexual abuse/neglect and were looking to this staff group to care for them, keep them safe and also show them appropriate boundaries”.⁵¹⁹ She felt that “the whole atmosphere of the home was unsafe sexually” making it “very hard” for children to be able to disclose any abuse they were suffering.⁵²⁰ For Ms Cooper:

*“there was a high level of risk of sexual abuse of residents within the home at the time of my investigation, by staff and other residents, because of the environment and culture generated by the staff group”.*⁵²¹

100. An initial draft of the report,⁵²² provided to Margaret Mackechnie, recommended that Beechwood be closed.⁵²³ Closure was envisaged as temporary – while certain staff were supported and trained, and necessary disciplinary action taken against other staff⁵²⁴ – but was seen by Ms Mackechnie and other managers as “contentious” and “practically and politically impossible” at the time.⁵²⁵ Closure also raised “the challenge of finding placements for children”, which was “huge”, as well as problems with re-deploying or making staff redundant. She recognised that the behaviour of the staff was “very concerning” but said she had to “balance the needs of the service and the needs of the children”.⁵²⁶ Ms Cooper removed the closure recommendation from her final report, feeling “a little pressure” to do so. She was “reassured” that alternative measures would be put in place to improve the situation for residents.⁵²⁷

101. Ms Mackechnie recalled that, in response to the report, the City reduced the number of children at Beechwood and did “the usual things you would do when there was a children’s home in difficulty”.⁵²⁸ Ms Michalska accepted on behalf of the City that steps taken to address problems in the home “were wholly inadequate”.⁵²⁹ Ms Cooper thought that there was a sexualised culture which created an “unsafe environment” for children, in which they would “find it very hard to talk about sexual abuse”.⁵³⁰ These concerns required urgent action. The response of Margaret Mackechnie and her colleagues left children in the City’s care exposed to continuing risk of harm.

Events leading to closure: 2002–2006

102. In April 2002, following disclosure by a resident that she had been raped by a 21-year-old male from outside the home, National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) inspectors were notified and visited Beechwood. They recommended that Beechwood be closed “because it was failing to safeguard and promote the welfare of the children resident there”, but within 48 hours agreed that the home could remain open provided that the number of residents was reduced from 10 to eight.⁵³¹ The City disputed that any recommendation to close was ever made at this time.⁵³² The proposed reduction in numbers does not appear to have taken place. Michelle Foster told us that in practice the number never went below nine,⁵³³ and the NCSC subsequently reported that the City had continued admitting young people to Beechwood over capacity, resulting “in some young people having to sleep on couches or share bedrooms against their wishes”.⁵³⁴

103. In September 2002, the same resident who disclosed in April that she had been raped, killed herself in her room at Beechwood. The NCSC formally notified the City that it had “reasonable cause to suspect that young people are likely to suffer significant harm. We think it incumbent upon the Local Authority to carry out immediate child protection risk assessments, as the basis for providing an informed judgement about whether young people in this children’s home are safe.”⁵³⁵ The City proposed relocating children to other homes, but the NCSC was not satisfied that the City had demonstrated “adequate and due regard to ensuring the safety and welfare” of those children, having inspected conditions and occupancy levels at the other homes.⁵³⁶

104. The NCSC’s report on the resident’s death⁵³⁷ was critical of the City’s care for her and of its running of Beechwood. It concluded that:

104.1. the City failed to respond to concerns relating to risks to the resident’s welfare and to notify the NCSC of “significant events” including allegations of sexual abuse;

104.2. children’s social care management had been advised that the resident should not remain in residential care amidst concerns that she was sexually active with a number of boys in the home and was being sexually exploited outside the home; and

104.3. while it might “transpire that this was a tragedy that could not have been averted”, her life in care “was characterised by unacceptable levels of risk, neglect and vulnerability. She was being ‘looked after’ by Nottingham City Council because she was considered to be in need of its care and protection. In the opinion of this Review the Local Authority failed to meet her needs in respect of the care it provided to her ... young people have not been cared for ... in a manner likely to safeguard and promote their welfare.”⁵³⁸

It recommended closure of Beechwood with “immediate effect”.

105. This was the third closure recommendation in around a year. The NCSC stated that Beechwood was only to be reopened once the City could demonstrate it was “capable of meeting the requirements of the Children’s Homes regulations and National Minimum Standards”. The City was told to undertake “a comprehensive review of all of its children’s homes”, to urgently review its procedures on notification of significant events, and to formulate a plan

⁵³¹ Other NCSC inspectors subsequently noted that the NCSC “should have acted on the basis of the initial evidence that the service was not up to standard” and closed the home (OFS008229_6).

on the suitability and relevance of its existing residential child care provision.⁵³⁹ It agreed to temporary closure, declaring “There are firm plans in place to refresh all aspects of operations at [Beechwood] with a view to it being reopened.”⁵⁴⁰

106. Michelle Foster told us that, the day before she was due to give evidence at the inquest into the resident’s death, Margaret Mackechnie made it clear that she should not do so as “it wouldn’t be good for the children if the public found out that they were taking drugs and having sex”. She was told that if she went ahead she would lose her job.⁵⁴¹ Ms Mackechnie did not remember specifically meeting Michelle Foster before the inquest, but did recall “a group meeting for the staff who were going to give evidence to the inquest”. She firmly denied that she told Michelle Foster that she “would lose her job if she said anything to the inquest”.⁵⁴²

107. Beechwood re-opened in June 2003. The City’s Area Child Protection Committee (ACPC) published a 44-page overview report into the resident’s death around the same time.⁵⁴³ It concluded that “no single action by a person or agency ... could have prevented [the resident’s] death” but questioned whether “more could have been done” at Beechwood “to create an environment where vulnerable young women, and men, were not liable to be sexually exploited by each other”.⁵⁴⁴ Ms Mackechnie accepted that a similar issue had been identified in Bronwen Cooper’s report two years earlier and that more could have been done.⁵⁴⁵ There were several recommendations, including that the City develop “Residential Care Standards, with appropriate staff development programmes, to ensure that children’s homes provide a safe environment where sexual and violent behaviours ... are appropriately managed” and that the ACPC develop “Practice Guidance and training for all agencies on assessing and working with children who have been sexually abused”.⁵⁴⁶ Similar recommendations on the need for such guidance and training had been made as far back as 1988 and 1990.⁵⁴⁷

108. On receipt of the ACPC report, the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) wrote to the City’s Chief Executive highlighting the report’s criticism of the lack of strategic response to incidents at Beechwood and commenting that it was very clear the child was in need of protection.⁵⁴⁸

109. The picture of Beechwood over the following three years, from monthly visits and external inspections, is mixed. Residents were said to present “a high level of aggressive and challenging behaviour”⁵⁴⁹ and to be “fed up with the complaints process”.⁵⁵⁰ Some young people placed at Beechwood had “to live with young people who are persistent offenders”, leading to attempts to coerce others into “drug use and prostitution”.⁵⁵¹ On the other hand, staff were seen to be making “concerted efforts” to maintain positive relationships with residents, and were trained on and aware of the processes to safeguard young people.⁵⁵²

110. By 2006, there was little evidence of positive relationships between staff and young people, and the home was still in a poor physical state.⁵⁵³ The Commission for Social Care Inspection (CSCI) wrote in February 2006 to Margaret Mackechnie identifying concerns that residents were exposed to “a variety of risks in terms of self harm and harm to each other”. The City was required “to take immediate action to address these issues and to ensure the safety of all persons in the service”.⁵⁵⁴

111. Subsequent inspections record an improved picture – in September 2006, the overall rating was ‘good’.⁵⁵⁵ By the end of the year Beechwood had no residents, with a “proposal currently being made to close the Unit”.⁵⁵⁶ It appears to have been finally closed in late 2006 or early 2007.

Reporting of and responses to allegations of sexual abuse

112. Approximately 10 allegations of sexual abuse have been made relating to the period from 1998 to 2006 at Beechwood,⁵⁵⁷ including from:

112.1. L43, who told staff in 2002 that he had been sexually assaulted by an older boy and the police were involved. He was told by a member of staff that if he went along with a prosecution he would be moved further away from his mother’s home. He told us that he felt both very let down and unsafe, not least because for a period his abuser stayed in the home.⁵⁵⁸

112.2. L29, who said that he tried to tell a social worker about his abuse by a staff member in 2005, but felt like she was ignoring him as she changed the subject.⁵⁵⁹

113. There is evidence of only one allegation against a staff member being made at the time in relation to this period. NO-F47 was suspended in October 1998, following an allegation of an “inappropriate relationship” with a male resident, and resigned before the disciplinary hearing.⁵⁶⁰ There were no documents on her file to suggest that a disciplinary investigation was concluded, despite guidance on the need to continue investigations following a resignation.⁵⁶¹

114. Andrew Bosworth’s understanding of the low number of allegations made at the time can be seen from a complaint he made in January 1999 about two inspectors from the City’s Registration and Inspection Unit:

“There seemed to be a continued pursuit of trying to find some form of abuse of young people, then a denial of being allowed to make a complaint. This preoccupation had been recognised by several staff members including myself. There was simply nothing to find because we do not abuse young people or deny them the opportunity to complain about issues at any time.”⁵⁶²

Andrew Bosworth said that this showed he was “prepared to challenge issues in an open and professional manner”.⁵⁶³

115. Beechwood was allowed to carry on operating dysfunctionally. Supervision of staff was negligible. The physical environment was overcrowded and unsuitable. Children were subject to bullying and harmful sexual behaviour. Margaret Mackechnie, the City’s senior manager with responsibility for Beechwood, failed to address these problems. When the City took over the management of Beechwood in 1998, it should have been closed.

C.8: Response to allegations against staff at other homes

116. From 1985 onwards, there have been several allegations of sexual abuse made against staff in residential homes other than Beechwood. Although the response to allegations developed over time in line with changes to policies and procedures (see Part B), there were persistent issues that continued to arise in the handling of such matters.

117. The Inquiry received around 60 allegations of sexual abuse against staff at homes other than Beechwood in relation to the period prior to 1980, with just under half saying that they disclosed at the time.⁵⁶⁴ There is only evidence of one member of staff being disciplined or prosecuted for the sexual abuse of children during this period.⁵⁶⁵

118. In March 1985, Michael Preston was sentenced to nine months’ imprisonment for sexually abusing a resident at Three Roofs Community Home, where he had worked as a member of care staff. At his sentencing, the judge said:

*“It appears ... that the officer in charge of the children’s home and other persons in the social services, were well aware of the temptations to which you were subject, and yet they took no steps to relieve you of your responsibilities in order to protect the child ... It seems to me extraordinary that you were not dismissed at a much earlier stage, and on the face of it culpable responsibility for the assault lies with your superiors as well as upon you.”*⁵⁶⁶

As a result, an enquiry was carried out by the County and a report sent to the Chair of the Social Services Committee in June 1985.⁵⁶⁷ It found that the Officer in Charge (OIC) at Three Roofs had significant concerns about Preston’s behaviour with the child, but they were satisfied that he had not known about Preston’s attraction to the child. The OIC reported his concerns to his line manager, Tony Dewhurst, but was told he could not dismiss Preston.⁵⁶⁸ The enquiry found that the OIC should be counselled but not disciplined. They found that his manager Tony Dewhurst had not been sufficiently perceptive when interviewing Preston and had failed to hear the “distress signals put out” by the OIC. As a result, the enquiry recommended that Dewhurst should undertake training on recruitment.⁵⁶⁹

119. Amberdale was another community home for 22 children, which opened in 1975 and closed in 1996. In 1986, a formal inquiry was carried out after Gerry Jacobs, Assistant Principal at Amberdale, was dismissed and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment for indecent assault of a resident. The inquiry found that the abuse had "finally opened Amberdale to scrutiny";⁵⁷⁰ it criticised the autocratic regime, supervision levels, and children's social care's management of the home. It made 29 proposals, including the introduction of a clear, explicit and easy complaints procedure for children.⁵⁷¹

120. In September 1986, NO-F147 was dismissed from Wollaton House following an admitted sexual relationship with a 16-year-old resident. There was no prosecution as, until 2003, there was no criminal offence where there was 'consensual' sexual activity between a residential care staff member or a foster carer and a 16 or 17-year-old child in their care.⁵⁷² NO-F147's appeal against his dismissal was rejected by councillors, although they requested consideration of possible alternative employment within the Council.⁵⁷³

121. In 1987, David Marriott, a residential care worker at Skegby Hall, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for four counts of indecent assault against two boys and was dismissed from his role.⁵⁷⁴ Following this, Councillor Tom Butcher wrote to other councillors⁵⁷⁵ that he had:

*"identified two facts that I believe show a lack of urgency, even complacency, over the number of sexual offences by staff on children in their care. 1. Is the fact 7 members of Social Services staff have been involved in such offences over the past two years, and 2. after 14 months they appear to have failed to implement a Home Office circular intended to protect children."*⁵⁷⁶

He asked for enquiries to be made "about offences committed by ... staff, the number of complaints received and how they are dealt with, etc".⁵⁷⁷ There is no evidence of a response by the County to the issues raised by Councillor Butcher. If a councillor removed from the detail of operational matters had such concerns, the Director of Social Services (at this time, Edward Culham) and senior officers familiar with the cases must have known something of the scale of sexual abuse in residential care.

122. In 1988, Dean Gathercole faced charges of sexual assault of girls at Amberdale, where he worked as a residential care worker. No evidence was offered at trial and Gathercole was discharged.⁵⁷⁸ A disciplinary hearing accepted his account that the allegations against him were unfounded but concluded that his actions prior to the allegations had been inappropriate.⁵⁷⁹ In May 2018, Gathercole was found guilty of six counts of indecent assault and three counts of rape against two girls at Amberdale in the 1980s. One of the victims had reported the abuse in 2000, at which point the Crown Prosecution Service had declined to authorise charges.⁵⁸⁰ He was sentenced to 19 years' imprisonment.⁵⁸¹

⁵⁷² For example in the cases of NO-F151, NO-F143, NO-F159, NO-F413, NO-F46. In 2003 it became an offence for an adult to "engage in sexual activity" with a person under the age of 18 with whom they are in a "position of trust" (Sexual Offences Act, 2003, sections 16-18).

123. In the early 1990s, according to Diane Kingaby, who was responsible for managing several children's homes in the County at the time, children's social care managers were "instructed to tell social workers that they should try anything to avoid their child coming into residential care as they were more likely to be sexually abused than not".⁵⁸²

124. Between 1990 and 1995, five members of staff were dismissed from Amberdale following allegations of sexual abuse, although two of the dismissals were subsequently overturned on appeal:

124.1. In 1990, NO-F151, a residential care worker at Amberdale, was dismissed four days after she had allegedly sexually abused a male resident. She was not formally interviewed or suspended before her dismissal. A subsequent report concluded there was an "error of not protecting a young person in our care, from the wholly inappropriate sexual relationship which took place" and "further questionable judgements" after the nature of the relationship had been disclosed.⁵⁸³ Staff suspicions about NO-F151's relationship with the child were not referred to senior management, case note entries recording concerns had been amended because it was felt they "could possibly be libellous", and there was insufficient supervision of both NO-F151 and the victim.⁵⁸⁴

124.2. In March 1992, NO-F158, a senior member of staff at Amberdale, was suspended following allegations of sexually abusing a resident. NO-F158 remained under suspension for almost three years and was eventually dismissed in February 1995. NO-F158's appeal against dismissal was rejected later that year.⁵⁸⁵

124.3. In May 1995, NO-F153 was dismissed for an inappropriate relationship with a female resident and for destroying her diary which contained entries relating to that relationship.⁵⁸⁶ Another member of staff, NO-F37, was dismissed for removing the child's diary, which also included allegations against him. At the time Amberdale "was an establishment in some crisis"; there had been "a breakdown of trust between management and some staff".⁵⁸⁷ After an appeal to councillors, NO-F37 was reinstated with a final warning.⁵⁸⁸

124.4. In August 1995, NO-F161 was dismissed following allegations of sexual abuse of a resident, having earlier been acquitted at trial in October 1994. Sandra Taylor, who chaired NO-F161's disciplinary, wrote to Stuart Brook (the County's Director of Social Services at the time⁵⁸⁹) setting out various issues "which give me cause for grave concern as to the welfare and safety of children in the care of the authority".⁵⁹⁰ These included: (i) lack of knowledge and adherence to child protection procedures amongst residential care staff at all levels; (ii) lack of attention given to the wellbeing of the complainant; and (iii) the fact that although one of the complainants had disclosed abuse on three occasions previously, none of the disclosures had been properly recorded or investigated. Although there is no evidence of a formal response to Sandra Taylor's letter, steps were taken by the County over the next five years to improve its recruitment, selection and training of staff.⁵⁹¹ NO-F161's dismissal was later substituted for a final warning by councillors on appeal in March 1996 and he was re-employed in a different post.⁵⁹²

125. Sandra Taylor also highlighted the fractious relationship between children's social care management and trade unions. During NO-F161's disciplinary hearing, children's social care was criticised by a trade union representative for taking a positive "child centred approach" and placing the interests of the child above the interests of staff.⁵⁹³ Stuart Brook described the relationship as an "exceptionally difficult" one.⁵⁹⁴ He recollected that a "culture of opposition" lasted through the mid-1990s and "delayed progress".⁵⁹⁵

126. During the same period, following an inspection of Amberdale, an SSI report in March 1993 raised concerns about the time taken to progress disciplinary issues.⁵⁹⁶ A "radical change" was sought. The SSI maintained that staff should be suspended automatically following allegations of abuse made against them, but David White, the County's Director of Social Services, thought this unrealistic "in the light of the number and nature of allegations made" and that with each allegation "the Service Manager investigating will consider the appropriate manner of keeping child and staff member out of contact while inquiries are made which will include considering suspension or temporary movement to another Unit".⁵⁹⁷ In June 1995, the SSI conducted another inspection, concluding that young people were not at risk at the time of the inspection, but that the unit was performing very poorly.⁵⁹⁸ The SSI recommended that Amberdale be closed. It was closed in 1996.⁵⁹⁹

127. Other significant cases during the early 1990s included:

127.1. In 1992, an internal enquiry was carried out by two children's social care managers after the conviction the previous year of Norman Campbell for buggery and indecent assault of children in residential care.⁶⁰⁰ Campbell had been a residential care worker and foster carer in the County in the 1980s. The enquiry report was critical of the County's approach to a disciplinary investigation into previous allegations, in 1988. There was an apparent "lack of understanding about the behaviour of sexual abusers and victims of sexual abuse". Additionally, the concerns of members of staff about Campbell's behaviour and relationships with children had been dismissed.⁶⁰¹ The report concluded that it was "unfortunate that the disciplinary process, as it related to Norman Campbell, could be criticised as having the effect of protecting its senior managers and ultimately the Department from the repercussions of acting on their beliefs about him”.⁶⁰² The authors suggested that lessons could be learned by a second, external, enquiry reviewing the County’s management of its staff working with children in care.⁶⁰³ David White decided against it, but was unable to explain to us why he did not take up the opportunity to do so.⁶⁰⁴

127.2. An October 1993 enquiry into events at Hazelwood Community Home during the period 1979 to 1985 found that children’s social care had been “more dedicated to the furtherance of staff employment rather than the care and protection of children”. There was an “over-emphasis on the criminal process” and police investigations,⁶⁰⁵ despite procedures requiring that child protection investigations and disciplinary procedures be considered separately.⁶⁰⁶ In particular, the report identified a failure to properly notify the Department of Health of persons deemed unsuitable to work with children⁶⁰⁷ and a failure to follow through with disciplinary proceedings where there had been a decision not to prosecute or where an employee had resigned prior to the conclusion of disciplinary proceedings. It was noted that “Allegations made by children towards members of staff at the moment are dealt with on an individual basis” and there was no overall evaluation. Between June 1992 and February 1993, there had been 14 known allegations against staff of abuse in community homes which pointed to a clear need for “rigorous Departmental oversight of these matters”.⁶⁰⁸ The report recommended that all allegations of staff misconduct towards children needed to “be monitored and reviewed, and that this be carried out in one place – Social Services Personnel.”⁶⁰⁹

127.3. In December 1994, NO-F162, who worked at Wollaton House, resigned before the conclusion of a disciplinary hearing following alleged sexual abuse of a female resident.⁶¹⁰ The disciplinary process was not seen through to a conclusion, despite the need for this being highlighted in the Hazelwood report the previous year.⁶¹¹

128. Until 2010 in the City⁶¹² and 2017 in the County,⁶¹³ appeals against disciplinary sanctions for residential care staff – including for child sexual abuse – were heard by councillors. Rod Jones (Senior Professional Officer (Child Care)) recalled that in the 1970s and 1980s successful pursuit of disciplinary proceedings was sometimes made more difficult by the councillors, who “took a staff centred approach rather than one which put children and vulnerable people first”,⁶¹⁴ and that such decisions had “a marked effect on the confidence of managers to deal with errant members of staff”.⁶¹⁵ We have seen examples of cases in which councillors overturned dismissals for child sexual abuse and substituted a warning.⁶¹⁶

129. Rod Jones told us that a culture of protecting staff “was very much the case in the late ’70s and the early ’80s”, persisting until the late 1990s.⁶¹⁷ Helen Ryan, a County Investigative Officer in the mid-1990s, recalled how it was “not unusual for residential managers at all levels to see protecting and supporting staff as their priority”.⁶¹⁸ In terms of councillors overturning disciplinary decisions on appeal, Rod Jones was “very aware ... that assistant directors would come back from disciplinaries saying, ‘That was a waste of time. They’re not supporting us. They’re taking a personnel line’.”⁶¹⁹ In the Hazelwood report, one recommendation was to review disciplinary processes to ensure that “the personnel/employee oriented bias is addressed”.⁶²⁰

130. In 1995, the County took steps to respond to some of these matters by establishing two posts of ‘Investigative Officer’ to conduct staff disciplinaries and other investigations.⁶²¹ Stuart Brook acknowledged this was “in direct response to ... the increase in the number, complexity and range of investigations”, recommendations from recent reports, and the 164 staff disciplinaries⁶²² over the previous three years, with the majority involving alleged abuse or malpractice by staff.⁶²³ It was hoped that the posts would provide a “central management perspective” on investigations.⁶²⁴ Previously, disciplinaries were conducted by different service managers across the County’s nine different districts, leading to “a lack of consistency across the whole department”.⁶²⁵

131. In January 1996, following NO-F162’s conviction and imprisonment for physical abuse, Rod Jones (then the County’s Head of Children and Family Policy) wrote to Stuart Brook highlighting several lessons relating to NO-F162’s case, including the need:

- following allegations of abuse, to “consider whether there is a need for wider investigations” and “ongoing monitoring of risk to children”;
- for a managerial decision where a staff member resigns before the conclusion of a disciplinary investigation; and
- where a child retracts a serious allegation, to get a report to assess possible influences.⁶²⁶

There is no evidence of a formal response to the letter. Stuart Brook said the points raised by Rod Jones were already set out in guidance to staff at the time.⁶²⁷ Further, a seminar on ‘Liability, Prevention, Apologies’ was held by the County in January 1998, attended by various managers within children’s social care and from the County’s legal, service standards and risk and insurance teams. The seminar reiterated the lessons identified in Rod Jones’ memo from January 1996, including the need to consider wider investigations, the approach to take when a staff member resigned before the conclusion of an investigation, and the approach to retractions.⁶²⁸

132. There were several other disciplinary investigations into alleged child sexual abuse by residential care staff from 1990 to 1997, including:

132.1. The dismissal and conviction of Steven Carlisle in November 1990 on three counts of indecent assault against children in care at Woodnook. Previously, following a disciplinary hearing in September 1989, there had been no further action taken due to insufficient evidence.⁶²⁹

132.2. Five dismissals of residential staff following allegations of child sexual abuse between 1990 and 1994.⁶³⁰

132.3. Four resignations (one each in 1990 and 1991, and two in 1997) following allegations of child sexual abuse. In only one of these was the investigation concluded after the resignation.⁶³¹

132.4. NO-F163's dismissal being substituted for a final warning on appeal in 1999.⁶³² He had previously been investigated in 1993, with no further action taken.

132.5. Three formal warnings (one in 1992, two in 1995) and one final written warning in 1997.⁶³³ In the latter, NO-F413 was not dismissed because "in 1983, there was a lack of clear guidance given to [him] as to the role of a houseparent" and "there may have been a lack of clarity about the boundaries of relationships at that time".⁶³⁴

132.6. Two cases (in 1996 and 1997) in which no further action was taken.⁶³⁵

133. In 1997, the County produced a report on the Safety of Children in Public Care,⁶³⁶ which noted that there was still no system in place (10 years after Councillor Butcher raised the issue, and four years on from the same recommendation in the Hazelwood report) for collating details of the number of investigations of alleged abuse concerning foster carers or residential workers.⁶³⁷ Stuart Brook thought that the issue of collating investigations was addressed following investment in an "integrated child care system".⁶³⁸ We have not seen any evidence of the collation of allegations or of steps taken to identify trends or patterns of abuse.

134. Following the local government review in 1998, the County and the new City Council each took sole responsibility for the children's homes within their area. There were far fewer disciplinary investigations into allegations of sexual abuse in residential care than in the previous decade.⁶³⁹ In five cases in which there were disciplinary investigations, there were decisions to take no further action (two in 1999, and one each in 2000, 2003 and 2006).⁶⁴⁰

135. In November 2000, NO-F46 was dismissed following an investigation by the City which found that he had a sexual relationship with a resident of Redtiles both in 1991 and subsequently after she had left the home. The dismissal was overturned on appeal and NO-F46 was reinstated with a final written warning.⁶⁴¹ There were concerns about the way in which a previous investigation into NO-F46 had been conducted by the County.⁶⁴²

136. In 2003, a report into Edwinstowe Hall Community Home⁶⁴³ looked at non-recent allegations of sexual and physical abuse.⁶⁴⁴ This is the only report prior to 2011 that had sought to evaluate the extent of abuse over a lengthy period in a children's home. It concluded that there had been no pattern of abuse at the home and that the number of allegations was no higher than would have been found in any establishment over a 30-year period. A disciplinary investigation into non-recent allegations of sexual and physical abuse against a member of staff there, NO-F41, concluded with a decision to take no further action.⁶⁴⁵

137. In May 2011, NO-F1, who previously worked at Beechwood and Ranskill Gardens, was dismissed for a relationship with a former resident, then aged 23, including sending her sexually explicit text messages.⁶⁴⁶ An allegation that NO-F1 had sex with the young person when she was in the care of the City was not upheld.⁶⁴⁷

138. In 2014, NO-F190 (a support worker at a privately run children's home) was dismissed following allegations of child sexual abuse.⁶⁴⁸ In September 2015, NO-F190 was acquitted on all of the charges against him.⁶⁴⁹

139. One of the recent convictions arising from Operation Equinox was of Myriam Bamkin in June 2018 for abuse whilst she was a residential care worker at Amberdale in the late 1980s. When the allegations were made in 2016, Ms Bamkin still worked for the County, but held the role of Fostering Team Manager, from which she was then suspended. During that suspension, in May 2017, Ms Bamkin resigned.

140. Contrary to the Council's own guidance since the 1990s, no disciplinary investigation was carried out and no conclusion reached, either prior to Ms Bamkin's resignation or after her conviction. At least, after she was convicted, the County should have come to a formal ⁶³⁹ This may be due to a lower residential care population. For example, in 1990 there were 380 children in residential care in the County (NSC000438_019), whereas in 2005 the County only had 14 places in residential care (NSC000702_3). It may also be due to improvements in vetting and the recruitment of staff (NSC001235 paras 6a.18-6a.27).

conclusion that if she had not resigned, she would have been dismissed for gross misconduct. This approach was taken by the County as far back as 1990 (NO-F142)⁶⁵⁰ and 1997 (NO-F164).⁶⁵¹ The County referred Ms Bamkin's case to the Health and Care Professions Council (HCPC) in 2016. As at April 2019, the HCPC had not yet made a determination about her fitness to practice.

141. Although there have been far fewer reported cases in recent years, the author of a 2011 serious case review into the death of a young person in the care of the City echoed the evidence of David White about the County's approach in the early 1990s:⁶⁵²

*"The assumption cannot be made that because a child is Looked After by the Local Authority that they are safe or that their needs are being fully met ... Professionals, including carers themselves, need to be prepared to think the unthinkable, and recognise that Looked After Children may be abused whilst in care and are very unlikely to disclose such abuse."*⁶⁵³

City Council Historical Concerns Project

142. In an example of a recent attempt to look broadly at allegations of abuse against staff, in November 2014, the City initiated a Historical Concerns Project to review the employment records of current and former employees (and so not foster carers) who had worked with vulnerable groups "to identify patterns of behaviour that may be of concern".⁶⁵⁴ Alison Michalska said that when she took up her appointment, she was uncomfortable not knowing who might historically have posed a risk to a child or who might currently be a risk to a child.⁶⁵⁵

143. The final report,⁶⁵⁶ published in June 2016, noted:

143.1. 75 current employees and 60 former employees were rated as high or medium risk;

143.2. four current employees and 24 former employees were the subject of allegations or concerns about sexual abuse of children;⁶⁵⁷ about 15 related to children in care (one current employee and about 14 former employees);

143.3. 14 current employees received disciplinary sanctions to "better safeguard service users", some of which took into account previous misconduct where this suggested a pattern of inappropriate behaviour;

143.4. 12 former employees were referred to the Disclosure and Barring Service and a number were subject to police enquiries and were progressed for investigation by the City; and

143.5. that "as a result of the review of historical employment records, the Council should have a high degree of confidence that appropriate action has been taken in respect of individuals that have and potentially could cause harm to vulnerable service users".

144. This review was a positive step to have taken and appears to have provided some reassurance that alleged perpetrators did not simply evade scrutiny because of bad practice applied at the time.

145. The level of abuse at Beechwood was serious and prolonged. Sexual abuse of children in residential care was also widespread in the Councils' other children's homes, particularly in the 1980s and 1990s. The abuse was never properly addressed by the Councils.

Part D

Case study: Foster care

D.1: Introduction

1. The investigation's second case study examines the institutional responses to allegations of child sexual abuse in foster care in the Councils as well as the barriers to disclosure of those allegations.
2. Fostering is the provision of care in a family home to a child unable to live with their own parents. For many years, it has been regarded as the preferred placement for the majority of children in care. It can take many forms, including emergency, short and long-term placements, short breaks, family and friends (kinship) care,⁶⁵⁸ fostering for adoption, and specialist therapeutic care.⁶⁵⁹ A local authority placing a child with foster carers has a continuing statutory duty to safeguard and promote the child's welfare.⁶⁶⁰ Where a child is in foster care but not in the care of the local authority, this is generally known as 'private fostering'.⁶⁶¹

D.2: Allegations of abuse

3. Over the last 40 years, 10 foster carers in Nottinghamshire have been convicted of sexual abuse against children in their care,⁶⁶² whilst four have been acquitted and several others deregistered following allegations. The Inquiry has received 75 individual accounts of sexual abuse in foster care in Nottinghamshire over this period, primarily drawn from statements and interviews given to the police and from investigations by the Councils.⁶⁶³ Additionally, 23 complainant core participants made allegations of sexual abuse in foster care,⁶⁶⁴ five of whom gave evidence at the public hearings.
4. The Inquiry received a number of accounts about abuse in foster care, including:
 - 4.1. P2 was in foster care in the 1960s. She was raped by her foster father on two separate camping holidays with her foster family.⁶⁶⁵
 - 4.2. P7 described regular sexual abuse by NO-F277 in a private foster placement from the age of eight until she left the home aged 26. She came to accept that the sexual abuse – which included rape – was part of her life.⁶⁶⁶

⁶⁵⁸ Formal kinship care is when a child in the care of the local authority is placed with a relative or another adult connected to the child. This can include grandparents, siblings, godparents or close family friends.

⁶⁵⁹ <http://www.gov.uk/foster-carers/types-of-foster-care>

⁶⁶⁰ Children Act 1989, section 22

⁶⁶¹ Private fostering is where a child is cared for by someone who is not their parent or relative and is arranged between a parent and a carer. It has been subject to regulation by local authorities under the Foster Children Act 1980 and subsequent statutory regulations in 1991 and 2005. It has been subject to National Minimum Standards since 2005.

⁶⁶² Bernard Holmes, Michael Chard, NO-F141, Norman Campbell, NO-F64, Douglas Vardy, Patrick Gallagher, NO-F77, Stephen Noy and Christopher Metcalfe. There have also been three foster carers convicted of sexual offences against children not in care (NO-F106, William Boden and Raymond Smith), and two relatives or friends of foster carers convicted of sexually abusing children in foster care (NO-F119 and Robert Thorpe).

4.3. L45 was sexually abused in foster care by NO-F57 in the late 1970s when she was around 10. She was also abused by Robert Thorpe, a friend of the foster family, both in the foster home and when she was moved to Beechwood, aged 14. She disclosed the abuse to staff, but despite this he continued to visit her and to rape her. Thorpe was convicted in 2009 of four counts of indecent assault and five counts of unlawful sexual intercourse against her, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment.⁶⁶⁷

4.4. During her foster placement in the 1970s, L47 was regularly indecently assaulted by her foster father, NO-F276.⁶⁶⁸

4.5. P13 was sexually abused by the 21-year-old brother of his foster mother when he was in foster care between 1979 and 1981. He forced P13 – then aged 11 – to masturbate him and perform oral sex on him, and on other occasions he lay behind P13 and simulated sex.⁶⁶⁹

4.6. F37 was sexually and physically abused by NO-F235, her foster carer, in the 1970s and 1980s from when she was a young child until she was 15. NO-F235 regularly touched F37 indecently and went on to rape her.⁶⁷⁰

4.7. L48 was aged six when he and his brother were placed with NO-F275 and NO-F358. In addition to regular physical abuse, L48 was made to touch NO-F275's penis.⁶⁷¹ In his next foster placement, aged 11, L48 was indecently assaulted by NO-F276, culminating in attempted anal rape.⁶⁷²

4.8. L35 was in foster care in the 1980s. Her foster carer NO-F116 would touch her between the legs. She added: *"He never forced himself onto me but would make me touch his penis, and him touch me. NO-F116 would hit me with the belt if I refused to do so."*⁶⁷³

4.9. L37 was placed with a foster family in 1986. One of the foster carers, NO-F36, digitally penetrated her in the bath. Two sons of NO-F36 digitally penetrated her, inserted objects into her anus and raped her.⁶⁷⁴

D.3: Background

5. Since the 1950s and until at least 1990 the County had a consistently higher percentage of children in foster care than comparable local authorities.⁶⁷⁵ In 1975, 40 percent of the 2,082 children in the care of the County were in foster care⁶⁷⁶ and by 1999 this had risen to 64 percent of children in care.⁶⁷⁷ This rose further to 86 percent in 2003⁶⁷⁸ but reduced to

63 percent in 2018.⁶⁷⁹ In the City, 69 percent of children in care were placed in foster care in 2004,⁶⁸⁰ rising to 73 percent in 2018.⁶⁸¹ The same proportion (73 percent) are in foster care across England.⁶⁸²

6. Both Councils have used independent fostering agencies (IFAs, ie private and voluntary providers of foster care)⁶⁸³ since the 1990s to supplement local authority foster carers. By 2018, 43 percent of children in foster care in the County and 52 percent in the City were placed with IFAs.⁶⁸⁴ Foster carers working with IFAs are subject to the same levels of assessment, supervision and training as local authority foster carers.⁶⁸⁵

D.4: Developments in foster care

7. The County undertook its first significant review of fostering services in 1975. The review recommended a co-ordinated approach across the County, an ‘examination’ of the recruitment and selection process of foster carers and of the level of support given to existing foster carers, and the introduction of a professional foster carer scheme.⁶⁸⁶ The County subsequently created a dedicated fostering unit,⁶⁸⁷ to recruit, train and support foster carers and to match children to carers. This was followed by guidance in 1979 on ‘The recruitment, selection and support of foster parents’.⁶⁸⁸

8. During the 1970s and 1980s, the County provided group home fostering, in which foster carers would care for up to 19 children at a time,⁶⁸⁹ even though the 1975 review cautioned against reliance on such homes.⁶⁹⁰ One witness characterised these as “unregulated and unofficial children’s homes”.⁶⁹¹ In 1989, a joint police and children’s social care report in the County recommended that, “wherever possible”, children who had been abused should not be placed together and that the use of family group foster homes should therefore cease.⁶⁹² Between 1975 and 1989, at least two group home foster carers were subject to allegations of sexual abuse.⁶⁹³

9. In May 1996, the County examined the provision of alternative family care services, including fostering and adoption. It concluded that “the current system is not working well enough ... no change is not an option”;⁶⁹⁴ there was a need for “consistent good practice from all child care teams”.⁶⁹⁵ However, a “significant number of recommendations” had not been implemented by the time of a follow-up review in 1999.⁶⁹⁶

10. Until 2000, the County devolved fostering services to a number of localities,⁶⁹⁷ resulting in apparently differing responses to allegations across the County.⁶⁹⁸ For instance, there are examples in Newark of a more child-centred approach,⁶⁹⁹ whilst in Mansfield the approach taken in some cases appeared to be more focused on the interests of the foster carers.⁷⁰⁰ In 2000, the management of the County's fostering teams was centralised within the County's Regulated and Corporate Parenting Services.⁷⁰¹

11. Following the 1998 local government reorganisation, many carers living in the City area chose to continue to work with the County, creating for the City an "immediate shortage of placement availability and choice for children in care".⁷⁰²

12. From 2002, the Councils were subject to national minimum standards relating to their management of fostering services.⁷⁰³ New national fostering service regulations came into force in 2002 and 2011,⁷⁰⁴ as did regulations on statutory visits.⁷⁰⁵ A new external inspection regime was also introduced, as discussed below.

Recruitment

13. From the late 1970s onwards, prospective foster carers applied to the County in writing, with references. Their assessment over three months included a series of interviews. Two social workers prepared assessment reports, the relevant fostering panel made a recommendation and a senior manager made the final decision on approval.⁷⁰⁶ If successful, foster carers would be 'registered', usually with placement criteria recorded such as the age range of children, their previous history (for example, in some instances foster carers would specify that they would not want to take children who had been sexually abused) and the length of placement. In some cases, selection criteria and standards were not followed.⁷⁰⁷

14. In the last 20 years closer scrutiny has been applied to applicants' background history and to their motivation for fostering.⁷⁰⁸ Reference checks became more wide ranging, including interviews with ex-partners and children formerly cared for by the applicants. It is now standard to explore with prospective foster carers the possible motivation for wanting access to children as well as the extent of empathy towards abused and vulnerable children.⁷⁰⁹ After approval, a risk assessment is carried out to identify the child's needs and match them with foster carers. Where a child has been abused or has previously abused others, children's social care will try to obtain a lone placement to reduce risk.⁷¹⁰

Training and standards

- 15. By the mid-1980s, training was offered to foster carers but it was not mandatory.⁷¹¹ There was a reluctance to engage in training by some foster carers who were subsequently found or alleged to have sexually abused children in their care.⁷¹² Even in the 2000s, a reluctance to take up training was not a bar to continuing to foster, particularly if foster carers were experienced.⁷¹³
- 16. All foster carers must now undergo induction training, meet certain standards within 12 months of approval and undertake ongoing training, which includes keeping children and young people safe from harm.⁷¹⁴ Sonia Cain, the City's Fostering Service Manager, thought that there should be more mandatory training.⁷¹⁵
- 17. Since 2000, there has been a career pathway for approved foster carers in the County with increased payments according to evidence of learning and skill. The City has an accreditation scheme to support improved training and reward those foster carers who accommodate children requiring higher levels of skill or support.⁷¹⁶
- 18. Since the Care Standards Act 2000, foster carers have been subject to national minimum standards.⁷¹⁷ These require "the child's welfare, safety and needs" to be at the centre of all decisions regarding their care.⁷¹⁸ When Jayne Austin became the County's Fostering Service Manager in 2002, she found instead an emphasis on the carer's needs.⁷¹⁹ By contrast, when inspecting the County's fostering services in 2004, the Commission for Social Care Inspection (CSCI) noted the then "child-centred" approach of its fostering panel.⁷²⁰

Supervision and review of foster carers

- 19. In the 1970s, a child's social worker would supervise both the child and their foster carers. As the social worker's primary concern was the child's welfare, this often resulted in foster carers feeling unsupported.⁷²¹ By the late 1980s, foster carers were allocated a separate fostering support worker (or 'supervising social worker') who provided support for the foster carers as well as scrutinising their skills and practice. Since 2002 there has been mandatory professional supervision of foster carers⁷²² and supervising social workers have been required to conduct at least one unannounced visit to foster homes each year.⁷²³
- 20. All foster carers have been subject to an annual review by the Councils since 1991,⁷²⁴ which initially consisted of a team manager's review of the supervising social worker's report.⁷²⁵ Since 2002, reviews have included a meeting between the carers and fostering team managers.⁷²⁶ Annual reviews have been carried out since 2016 by a fostering independent reviewing officer⁷²⁷ (with further reviews if any allegations are made). Children's views of placements – including the foster carers' biological children – form part of the annual review.⁷²⁸

Visits to children in foster care

21. From 1955, social workers were required to visit foster homes once every two months in the first two years of placement, and every three months thereafter.⁷²⁹ This was the primary check on the quality of care that children were receiving. However, several complainants, who were in foster care in the 1960s, 1970s or 1980s, told us that they were not visited on a regular basis, if at all.⁷³⁰ Social workers were also required to carry out reviews of the child's welfare every six months.⁷³¹

22. From 1991, the frequency of social work visits increased, with an initial visit after one week, and then every six weeks for the first year and every three months thereafter.⁷³² The expectation was that social workers would speak to the child alone, without the foster carers present, to give the child the opportunity to raise any issues. Team managers would check whether this had been done.⁷³³

23. Steve Edwards (the County's Service Director for Youth, Families and Social Work) and Sonia Cain were confident that social workers now see children alone in the County and City.⁷³⁴ Since 2010, regulations have required that a child in care must be visited every six weeks unless the placement is long term.⁷³⁵ In long-term placements, visits need only to be every three months (or every six months, after the first 12 months in the placement, if the child consents to this).⁷³⁶ The Councils' visiting standards go slightly further than the six-week minimum required by regulations, requiring more frequent visits for long-term placements.⁷³⁷

Out-of-area placements

24. The use of out-of-area placements – where a child in the care of one local authority is placed within another authority's geographical area – is widespread across England and Wales and is subject to DfE statutory guidance.⁷³⁸ Placements should be as close to the original local authority as possible, so that greater support can be provided.⁷³⁹ In the past, where a child was placed in an out-of-area foster home it was common for the authority in which the child was placed to be asked to visit the child, but this is now less frequent. Under current practice, the child will retain their social worker, who will continue to conduct the required regular visits. Sonia Cain told us that fostered children who move out of the City may not be visited “as frequently as they should”.⁷⁴⁰

25. When City foster carers move to another area,⁷⁴¹ the City notifies the relevant local authority and will discuss support and training for the foster carer with that authority’s fostering team.⁷⁴²

D.5: External inspections

26. Until 2013, fostering services were inspected independently of other children’s services and against national minimum standards set out in legislation.⁷⁴³ Between 2004 and 2011, the Councils’ fostering services received broadly positive assessments from these external inspections.

26.1. CSCI’s inspection of the County in 2004⁷⁴⁴ was positive. It found “clear lines of management” and the use of risk assessments to keep young people safe and minimise risk. A guide for children in placements, including a section on how to raise concerns, was “excellent”. The County kept a “centrally collated management system of numbers and outcomes of allegations of neglect or abuse of a child in foster care”.⁷⁴⁵ Serious incidents and child protection issues had, where required, been notified to the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC). Foster carers found training to be “excellent”.

26.2. The City’s fostering service received a similarly positive report from the CSCI in 2005,⁷⁴⁶ meeting all eight standards concerning the welfare of children in foster care. All foster carers had completed child protection training prior to approval.

26.3. In 2006, the County was found to have met the majority of the standards on which it was assessed.⁷⁴⁷ Assessment and reviews of foster carers were completed to “a high standard” and there were increasing training opportunities (including on safeguarding and caring for abused children). However, recording of information by carers was “wholly inappropriate”.⁷⁴⁸ The City was advised to ensure all foster carer placements had been adequately assessed and approved, and to provide better support to carers located outside Nottinghamshire.⁷⁴⁹

26.4. In 2008, the County’s service was rated ‘satisfactory’ by Ofsted, but with concerns raised about record keeping and record management. The fostering panel was now independent and there were risk assessments in relation to bedroom-sharing arrangements for young people who had been abused or had abused others, alongside “robust” initial risk assessments for all children placed with foster carers.⁷⁵⁰ The City’s service was rated as ‘good’, with new policies on managing allegations, although central records relating to allegations and complaints did not contain sufficient detail. For example, dates of allegations and outcomes of investigations were not recorded.⁷⁵¹

26.5. By 2011, the County’s fostering service had improved to ‘good’. Allegations were being taken seriously and placement planning, risk assessments and safe caring policies were ‘good’.⁷⁵² The City’s fostering service was also rated as ‘good’.⁷⁵³

27. Since 2013, Ofsted has inspected children’s services as a whole, rather than fostering services as a separate function.⁷⁵⁴

27.1. In 2014, the City was rated ‘requires improvement’ overall. Specific criticisms of its fostering service included insufficient information provided to foster carers about children being placed with them, and a need to ensure “there is sufficient technical knowledge and expertise” within its fostering and adoption service.⁷⁵⁵

27.2. The County’s 2015 inspection⁷⁵⁶ found most children to be living in stable placements and cared for by skilled foster carers. The fostering panel was “effective”, with members receiving annual appraisals and performance development plans.

27.3. In November 2018, shortly after the conclusion of the Inquiry’s public hearings, the City was rated as ‘requires improvement’ across its children’s social care services.⁷⁵⁷ In relation to fostering, Ofsted found that “A small group of very young children have been left vulnerable in unsuitable private fostering arrangements” with insufficient management oversight. Children’s needs were said generally to be met, but those with complex needs experienced too many moves before finding stability. Plans to increase the range of local foster carers were progressing well, but decisions on matching them with children were not well recorded. By contrast, foster carers were supported well and were assessed to be of a high quality. Carers valued their supervising social workers and the quality of training and support provided.

27.4. A 2019 inspection of the County was a ‘focused visit’ and therefore did not look at fostering services.⁷⁵⁸

D.6: Responses to abuse

1970–1979

28. In the 1970s, the County had no policy or procedure in place for responding to allegations of sexual abuse against foster carers. The Inquiry has evidence of only three examples of institutional responses to allegations of sexual abuse in foster care, all of which show serious failings by children’s social care:

⁷⁵⁸ Focused visit to Nottinghamshire County Council children’s services (2019).

28.1. Foster carer NO-F106 pleaded guilty to indecent assault of his two nieces, aged 8 and 11, and was given a three-year probation order in October 1976. Two foster children were returned to NO-F106 the following month. For at least two years, foster child NO-A272 and the foster carers were left “without proper monitoring and advice”. NO-A272 subsequently made allegations of sexual abuse in relation to this period.⁷⁵⁹

28.2. F37 alleged she was abused by NO-F235 and told not to speak to social workers. After she ran away in 1974, she told a social worker “how unfair” NO-F235 was. She did not disclose the sexual abuse at the time because she did not think she would be believed.⁷⁶⁰ NO-F235 denied the abuse when questioned in 1975 by children’s social care following F37’s later disclosure. No further action was taken.⁷⁶¹ By the time F37 disclosed to the police in 2015, NO-F235 had died.

28.3. In 1978, a “meeting at County Hall” considered allegations that foster carer NO-F234 had sexually abused a child in his care, aged 10, but was inconclusive in light of the foster carer’s denial. The social worker’s view was that “a more searching enquiry could only be destructive” to the foster carers and the complainant. No further girls were to be placed with the foster carers. It was noted that NO-F234 “should in future take care”.⁷⁶²

29. In other instances of alleged sexual abuse in foster care during this period, complainants felt unable to disclose. For example, while in the City’s care in 1972, L48 moved to Cheshire with his foster carers where he was sexually abused by his foster carer, NO-F275. L48 felt unable to disclose the abuse as he was not seen alone by a social worker. L48 was then sexually abused by his next foster carer, NO-F276, in 1975. L48 was again unable to disclose the abuse as he was worried he would not be believed and the abuse had made him question his own sexuality.⁷⁶³

30. From 1984, there were procedures governing child sexual abuse in foster care within the County.⁷⁶⁴ They were not consistently applied:

30.1. In October 1985, NO-F138, a County residential care worker and foster carer, admitted indecently assaulting a foster child, NO-A325, from the age of 14. The abuse had been reported three months earlier, but the allegations were initially regarded as “malicious” by children’s social care. The 1984 multi-agency child abuse procedures were not applied by either the police or children’s social care until NO-F138’s admission, despite three prior opportunities to investigate (including two reports of abuse of another child, NO-A326, in 1984). As a result, children were left at risk of abuse. Following his admission, NO-F138 was dismissed in March 1986 for “a serious violation of trust” and “putting his sexual needs before those of a child entrusted in his care”.⁷⁶⁵ Inexplicably, he was given 10 weeks’ notice “in view of the unfortunate background”.⁷⁶⁶ An inquiry into this case in 1986, commissioned by Edward Culham, the Director of Social Services, concluded that “no officers who had been involved had got a grip of the situation” and that “close relationships” between senior officers and NO-F138 had “impaired judgements”.⁷⁶⁷ In reality, the County’s response was biased in favour of the perpetrator and protection of their own staff. The police only cautioned NO-F138 for his abuse of NO-A325, taking no action in relation to the abuse of NO-A326.⁷⁶⁸

30.2. The police failed to apply the procedures in 1986 when NO-A257, then aged 15, alleged that her foster father NO-F97 had sex with her when she was “half asleep”, leaving money by her bed. She ran away and disclosed the abuse to her social worker. Given NO-A257’s “history of prostitution”, the police considered the abuse as her “plying her trade rather than being harmed”. After “considerable delay”, no further action was taken. Children’s social care noted the delays and raised concerns at the police “ridicule” of NO-A257, recording that “the needs of children rather than [NO-F97’s] must be uppermost in our minds”. NO-F97 and his wife were removed from the list of specialist foster providers, but the couple were still to be considered for short-term placements.⁷⁶⁹

30.3. Procedures were followed when in March 1988 a foster carer (NO-F129) was deregistered and later that year stood trial but was acquitted.⁷⁷⁰ He had been charged in late 1987 with the sexual abuse of two foster children. Following the acquittal, Rod Jones (then Principal Assistant – Child Care) gave a statement to the press saying that children’s social care believed the girls and that, notwithstanding the acquittal, they would not be placing any more children with NO-F129.⁷⁷¹

31. In 1989, a significant case of abuse by a foster carer was prosecuted, leading to an internal report and a considered response from the County. The internal report was prepared for David White, the Director of Social Services, in advance of the trial of Michael Chard. Chard was charged with sexually abusing a child in foster care over several years in the late 1980s. The report identified a number of failures by children’s social care, including:⁷⁷²

31.1. Chard was allowed to foster children on his own from 1978, without proper assessment or sufficient scrutiny of his suitability to do so.

31.2. As well as being sexually abused by Chard, one child in his care, NO-A242, was also regularly sexually abused by her respite carer (NO-F88)⁷⁷³ despite a social worker raising concerns about NO-F88’s behaviour with children’s social care in 1977, and recommending that no further children be placed with him.

David White acknowledged an “increasing need to accept that the sexual abuse of children is a significant problem and that assessment practices and subsequent proceedings will need to be continuously improved.”⁷⁷⁴ In August 1989, Chard was convicted and sentenced to three years’ imprisonment.⁷⁷⁵

⁷⁷³ Police believed NO-A242’s complaints about this in 1988 but NO-F88 was not prosecuted because of his ill-health (NSC000360_9-12; NSC000344). The children remained in the placement because, although the children’s social care believed that NO-F88 abused the children, it was felt that his wife would be more protective than ever.

32. Following this investigation and the cases which led to it, children’s social care circulated a memorandum to senior managers in March 1989. Managers were asked to ensure that “there is no doubt in the minds of your senior officers” that child abuse procedures applied to all children in care, with “no exception”.⁷⁷⁶ Detailed investigation guidelines relating to abuse in foster care were also prepared.⁷⁷⁷ These specified that carers’ registration was to be reviewed after any investigation and, following a case conference, a senior manager would decide whether a placement could continue, whether other children were at risk, or any other necessary action.⁷⁷⁸ Training was to be provided to foster carers on how their behaviour might be interpreted by a child, as well as on dealing sensitively with abused children placed with them.⁷⁷⁹

33. Rod Jones also reminded all foster carers of the risks and responsibilities involved in foster care:

*“Any person with reason to believe that a child has been abused should bring this to the attention of the Area social worker ... In the few occasions when this happens within foster care, the child still gets first consideration ...”*⁷⁸⁰

34. Approximately six months after Chard’s conviction, in February 1990, another foster carer, NO-F141, was charged with sexual offences against three foster children. Over 25 years he had fostered 400 children, including a large number of teenage girls who had previously been sexually abused. NO-F141 admitted offences against one child, but denied the others, calling the girls “liars”. The 10 children then placed with NO-F141 were moved.⁷⁸¹

35. A number of investigations of abuse in adoption or foster families prompted children’s social care⁷⁸² to prepare an internal monitoring report (the Davis report).⁷⁸³ It was widely circulated, including to David White, the Chair of the Social Services Committee (Joan Taylor) and one other councillor.⁷⁸⁴ Rod Jones described the extent of abuse in foster care set out in the Davis report as “considerable”.⁷⁸⁵ It recorded 10 allegations of sexual abuse between April 1989 and March 1990.⁷⁸⁶ Some led to prosecution or deregistration, but in others there was no formal action or the outcome was unknown. While the report noted positive steps taken by children’s social care over the previous 18 months (including a revised policy and procedure guide, training strategies and a monitoring process),⁷⁸⁷ it highlighted concerns about what had happened in practice. This included staff dismissing allegations by prejudging the complainant or inappropriately taking the side of the accused foster carer. Recommendations included introducing an improved code of practice on investigation of allegations, increased training of foster carers, and a requirement to have an ongoing and monitored central record of allegations of carer abuse.⁷⁸⁸ We have seen no evidence that these recommendations were implemented, other than a brief section on foster care included in the 1992 ACPC Child Protection Procedures.⁷⁸⁹

36. When asked about his views on the level of abuse in foster care at this time, David White (the County's Director of Social Services from 1989 to 1994) explained that he had had no direct involvement in the day-to-day running of the fostering service.⁷⁹⁰ Abuse in foster care was not an area he had focused on because it had not been brought to his attention as frequently as other matters.⁷⁹¹

37. Rod Jones thought there was a misplaced belief that foster carers were "exceptional carers"; consequently abuse was more likely to remain undetected. Barriers such as shame and threats from perpetrators prevented foster children from disclosing abuse.⁷⁹²

38. Similar issues to those identified in the Davis report were raised by the case of Norman Campbell, a residential care worker who was approved as a foster carer in 1987.

38.1. At the time of his approval as a foster carer, concerns were raised by two children's social care staff about Campbell's close relationship with NO-A197, a child who he was seeking to foster. These concerns were known by those considering his application. Campbell dismissed the concerns as "racist". A meeting was held, at which the staff members who had raised the concerns were left feeling "belittled" and "chastised" by the response of children's social care managers Tony Dewhurst and Paul Bohan.⁷⁹³ In May 1988, another child (NO-A198) alleged that he had been sexually abused by Campbell. There were no applicable child protection procedures at that time as NO-A198 was regarded as a "child outside the home".⁷⁹⁴

38.2. Following a police investigation, the Crown Prosecution Service did not prosecute and disciplinary proceedings found NO-A198's allegations "not proven"⁷⁹⁵ but both the County's Child Protection Officer and the police believed NO-A198's account. Campbell returned to residential social work as deputy officer in charge of a children's home. The fostering panel relied on a previous positive assessment in deciding that Campbell should be allowed to continue to foster.

38.3. Further children alleged sexual abuse by Campbell in 1990 and in the following year he was sentenced to six years' imprisonment for sexual abuse of three children, including NO-A197.⁷⁹⁶ Tony Dewhurst now accepts that he and others had not been "sharp enough" to realise what was happening.⁷⁹⁷

39. David White notified the Social Service Inspectorate (SSI) in 1991 about the Campbell case, drawing attention to the steps that had been taken since and to the fact that guidance on sexual abuse by non-family members was now included in the ACPC procedures.⁷⁹⁸ The

SSI suggested an enquiry be carried out by an external “consultant”.⁷⁹⁹ An internal review was instead undertaken and in July 1992 made numerous recommendations, including that any allegation involving a foster carer should prompt a formal review of both the carer and the placement (noting that this had already become children’s social care policy in the County) as well as more rigorous assessment and approval of foster carers. Echoing the Davis report in 1991, the review recommended a central monitoring system of allegations against foster carers (and children’s social care employees).⁸⁰⁰

40. As at September 1994,⁸⁰¹ the ACPC Child Protection Procedures referred to a “monitoring process for alleged carer abuse”.⁸⁰² The system was to be operated by a specific member of staff with details of allegations of abuse against foster carers and the outcome centrally recorded. An annual report was to be supplied to a senior manager detailing “numbers, outcomes and trends in carer abuse”. Despite this, other than the Davis report in 1991 and one monitoring sheet from 1992,⁸⁰³ we have no evidence of central monitoring of allegations until 2004.⁸⁰⁴ Had the model of the Davis report in 1991 been followed, this would likely have increased the understanding of the scale of sexual abuse in foster care, the steps needed to address it and improved the institutional response. Even this would not have been sufficient. There should have been monthly reports on numbers and outcomes to senior managers, councillors and the ACPC, and a system allowing for proper scrutiny of that information.

41. Following the Campbell case, there is evidence that children’s social care was aware of 11 further instances of allegations of sexual abuse in foster care in the County over the next six years.⁸⁰⁵ In many of these cases, action was taken by the County in response (such as moving the child or deregistering the foster carer). In one case, however, a foster carer was allowed to return to his employment working with children without further assessment after an investigation could not substantiate the allegations.⁸⁰⁶ Only two of the 11 cases led to convictions of foster carers,⁸⁰⁷ although children’s social care or the police had serious concerns or thought abuse had occurred in several others.⁸⁰⁸ In one case, in which Douglas Vardy was convicted of sexually abusing three foster children, it was identified that one victim, NO-A256, had been removed from her family because of abuse and then been sexually abused in each of her three foster placements.⁸⁰⁹

42. The allegations received during this period primarily concerned non-recent sexual abuse. Under procedures at the time, allegations of non-recent abuse were to be responded to in the same way as contemporary allegations, including prompt referral to social services, discussion with the police if appropriate and a strategy meeting to plan the way forward.⁸¹⁰

43. Between 2002 and 2006, there were at least seven cases in which allegations of sexual abuse of children by their foster carer were reported to police and investigated but did not lead to conviction.⁸¹¹ Crown Prosecution Service guidance at the time, which has since been revised, required prosecutors to consider the relevance of previous sexual history⁸¹² or the possible motive for making allegations.⁸¹³ In one case where a foster carer was acquitted, one of the complainants had disputed the accuracy of entries in records about him being happy with the alleged perpetrator and this was considered to fatally undermine his credibility.⁸¹⁴

44. In 2002, NO-F114 and NO-F115 were arrested following allegations relating to sexual abuse in the late 1970s. Two complainants had disclosed the abuse in 1983, but no further action had been taken despite children’s social care at the time believing the allegations. It was noted in 1983:

“Presumably therefore, what [NO-A91] says [NO-F114] did with her is true. It was agreed that neither girl should know about today’s discussion, and that there would be no point in pursuing it further.”⁸¹⁵

A strategy meeting in 2002 concluded that there was no attempted “cover up” by children’s social care employees who had known of the disclosures at the time. No action was taken against them. The response in 1983 had allowed NO-F114 to continue fostering, exposing children to further risk. Following an initial decision to prosecute in 2002, the case was ultimately discontinued due to “insufficient evidence”.⁸¹⁶ The reasons are unclear.

45. In 2004, the Crown Prosecution Service decided not to charge NO-F191 with sexually abusing her former foster child, NO-A394. The allegations were considered to be “substantially undermined” as NO-A394:

- had made previous allegations which were referred to children’s social care but did not repeat the allegations when interviewed by the police;⁸¹⁷
- admitted sexually abusing other children in the placement;⁸¹⁸ and
- would likely be accused of making the allegation to seek revenge on NO-F191 for ending contact with him.⁸¹⁹

⁸¹⁰ NSC000079_180.

⁸¹¹ There was one conviction of a foster carer, William Boden, in 2002, for offences over a 20-year period against children not in care (JNQ001673).

⁸¹² CPS002792: the Crown Prosecution Service Prosecution Manual 1996 states that “The character of the complainant cannot be ignored when considering an alleged sexual offence. Such evidence may be relevant to the question of consent.”

⁸¹³ CPS002787_5 para. 5.3e; the Code for Crown Prosecutors 2000 required consideration of the witness’s background, including whether they may have any motive or relevant previous convictions.

⁸¹⁷ Police investigators thought that he had been “primed” not to say anything, but would, in any event, be cross-examined on the basis that he had made “previous unproven allegations” (NTP001178_1).

⁸¹⁹ NO-A394 was not happy in the foster placement and was placed elsewhere, but NO-F191 decided to stop fostering and end all contact with NO-A394 (NTP001178_1).

Although these features were not uncommon, Sue Matthews (a Senior Crown Prosecutor) said that they would still cause her concern today if she were advising on the case.⁸²⁰ NO-F191 resigned from fostering following the allegations but children's social care continued with their own investigations. NO-F191 was deregistered in 2005 following a unanimous recommendation from the fostering panel.⁸²¹

46. In 2003 and 2005, the Crown Prosecution Service concluded that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute Raymond Smith for alleged sexual abuse of two fostered children (aged 10 and 13), due to undermining evidence in social services records and from other witnesses.⁸²² Smith had privately fostered over 100 children during the 1980s before becoming a local authority approved foster carer in the 1990s.⁸²³ He was deregistered as a foster carer by the City in 2004,⁸²⁴ but no documents are available regarding the response to these allegations. It does not appear that any wider enquiries were carried out by the City at that time,⁸²⁵ nor was the matter reported to the NCSC as required.⁸²⁶

47. In 2014, further allegations of non-recent abuse were made against Raymond Smith. In response, Smith "minimised the allegations" by saying that one complainant "had been 15 years old at the time and that he was a man and enjoyed it".⁸²⁷ It also emerged that in 1981, Smith had been found in bed with a 15-year-old boy by his ex-wife.⁸²⁸ Strategy meetings recorded that "During their tenure as foster carers, allegations were made against Ray Smith by a number of young people of a sexual nature" and "it is uncertain why Mr and Mrs Smith were approved as long-term carers".⁸²⁹ This was a serious failure. Ultimately, in 2016, Smith pleaded guilty to indecent assault of a different child (who was not in care) and received a two-year suspended sentence.⁸³⁰ We have not seen any evidence of the City, as required, notifying their Local Safeguarding Children Board (LSCB) about the case,⁸³¹ nor of consideration given by the LSCB as to whether the case should be subject to a serious case review or internal practice review into how Smith had been approved as a foster carer and had remained approved for so long. An independent review should have been carried out.

48. In 2006, NO-A286 again disclosed (having retracted her initial allegations, made in 1988) that she had been abused in the late 1980s by her foster carer, Stephen Noy, who was no longer fostering. A series of strategy meetings concluded that the allegations remained unproven.⁸³² The Crown Prosecution Service decided not to prosecute due to concerns about NO-A286's credibility, partly on the basis of her poor behaviour as recorded in her social care records.⁸³³ In 2013 another complainant came forward alleging abuse by Noy, who was then charged in respect of both. Noy was convicted and sentenced to 17.5 years'

49. In 2006, following allegations against foster carer NO-F70 of harassment and child sexual abuse which were not pursued by the IFA responsible for the foster carers,⁸³⁵ NO-F70 and his wife moved to the Isle of Wight⁸³⁶ with D6, then aged 10 and in the care of the City (although he had been placed in Yorkshire). Once on the Isle of Wight, D6 was physically, psychologically and sexually abused by NO-F70. Visits by City social workers became sporadic and were regularly cancelled. D6 was eventually removed from the foster placement in 2009, after others made allegations of sexual abuse against NO-F70. There was no investigation by the City into whether D6 had been abused, nor strategy meetings held to consider whether any other children placed with the foster carers might have been abused. D6 disclosed the abuse to Nottinghamshire Police in 2017, who mistakenly thought the abuse had occurred in Yorkshire so passed the case on to that force and ceased contact with D6. Chief Superintendent Robert Griffin commented this was “not good enough”.⁸³⁷ This is true of the response of both the City and the police.

50. This period is marked by two significant cases in the County – Patrick Gallagher and NO-F77 – each involving sexual abuse of foster children by their foster carers. Both cases led to reviews of practice. Over the same period, there were also a number of other allegations of sexual abuse against foster carers which show problems with the Councils' institutional responses.

51. Patrick Gallagher and his wife were respite foster carers for the County from the late 1980s.

51.1. In 2006, a child who had been placed with them disclosed to his permanent foster carer that Gallagher made him watch pornography. There was no prosecution but, following a children's social care investigation, the Gallaghers wrote to children's social care to say they wanted to resign from fostering. Children's social care refused to accept the resignation and instead decided to formally deregister the Gallaghers in the same year, following the fostering panel's recommendation.⁸³⁸

51.2. Further allegations emerged in November 2010 following Mrs Gallagher's death. Patrick Gallagher quickly admitted offences in the face of overwhelming evidence, including video tapes.

51.3. In May 2011, Patrick Gallagher pleaded guilty to 55 sexual offences, including rape, committed against 16 boys between 1998 and 2010.⁸³⁹ Gallagher received 13 life sentences and was to serve at least 28 years. He abused young boys on an “unprecedented scale” and did “incalculable” damage.⁸⁴⁰ None of the abuse was detected over this 12-year period.

51.4. A serious case review was commissioned, written by Peter Maddocks,⁸⁴¹ and published in December 2011.⁸⁴² It focused on the seven children who had been in the County’s care when abused by Gallagher, aged between eight and 14 at the time of the abuse. In addition to identifying significant barriers to disclosure faced by the children, key findings included:

- The initial assessment of the Gallaghers as foster carers was more rigorous than required by the standards of the time, although there would be greater scrutiny now.⁸⁴³
- The Gallaghers were consistently reluctant to undergo training.⁸⁴⁴ This would not be accepted now and should not have been accepted at the time, at least not after the introduction of national minimum standards in 2002.⁸⁴⁵
- In 2006, the police were insufficiently involved and children’s social care proceeded without focusing on the allegations from a child protection perspective, but these failures made no difference to the outcome.⁸⁴⁶
- In hindsight, there had been a failure to recognise and respond to the potential significance of behaviour exhibited by some children and of Gallagher’s behaviour. Both highlighted the importance of training and the need for specialist social workers and police officers to be involved in discussions about the significance of behaviour displayed by children and adults.⁸⁴⁷
- Social workers often did not see the children in placement at the Gallaghers.⁸⁴⁸ Much of the social work case-recording had focused on the physical environment rather than more complex information such as the child’s views, wishes and feelings.⁸⁴⁹

The serious case review recommended more therapeutic and support services for victims and survivors.⁸⁵⁰ Phil Morgan, the County’s Fostering Team Manager for the Mansfield District at the time, thought that children’s social care “got off the hook” with the serious case review. He thought that children’s social care should have acknowledged their failures in safeguarding, fostering and not identifying the abuse at any time over 12 years.⁸⁵¹ We agree.

51.5. Additional complainants came forward after Gallagher’s conviction; he received a police caution as the Crown Prosecution Service decided it was not in the public interest to pursue another prosecution given that he was never going to be released.⁸⁵² Chief Superintendent Griffin thought Gallagher should have been charged with those additional offences as it would have made a positive difference for the complainants.⁸⁵³

52. NO-F77 and his wife NO-F76 were foster carers from 1988 until 2012, fostering over 30 children in that time.⁸⁵⁴

52.1. In 1995 and 1998 reports of sexual abuse and sexualised behaviour were made to NO-F76 about NO-F77 regarding two children in their care (NO-A203 and NO-A200). NO-F76 passed the allegations to their supervising social worker Mrs Chris Middleton, who failed to take any action in response.⁸⁵⁵

52.2. In 2000, NO-A200 reported to a care worker that he had been sexually abused by NO-F77. This led to a multi-agency investigation. Phil Morgan urged colleagues to keep an “open mind” about whether NO-A200 may have fabricated the allegation, and that four incidents involving NO-F77 and NO-F76 over a long period as foster carers was “not bad going”.⁸⁵⁶ Although he told us that he regretted this almost immediately,⁸⁵⁷ these phrases, taken together, amounted to inappropriate language for a professional to use in a formal meeting about sexual abuse and indicated a presumption against the child’s truthfulness. Such comments are likely to have prejudiced a proper consideration of NO-A200’s allegation from the outset.⁸⁵⁸

52.3. NO-A200 did not retract his allegation, despite being given the opportunity to “change or retract his story”,⁸⁵⁹ but the police took no further action due to concerns about NO-A200’s credibility.

52.4. The strategy meetings concluded that “the allegations cannot be substantiated nor can they be dismissed”.⁸⁶⁰ The “differing professional views” as to whether the abuse was likely to have taken place should have been resolved.

52.5. Mrs Middleton felt it would be unfair for NO-F77 and NO-F76 to have to stop fostering,⁸⁶¹ but failed to raise at the strategy meeting that allegations had been made against NO-F77 in 1995 and 1998. She and Mr Morgan concluded they had “no doubt” that NO-F77 did not abuse NO-A200 and in a report for the fostering panel “strongly” recommended they were reapproved as foster carers.⁸⁶² Although Kathy Swift, chair of the strategy meetings, expressed “reservations” about NO-F77 and NO-F76 continuing as foster carers in a letter to the fostering panel,⁸⁶³ the views of Mrs Middleton and Mr Morgan were given precedence over a thorough investigation.⁸⁶⁴

52.6. The fostering panel was convened, with Mr Morgan as a voting member even though this was a conflict of interest given his previous involvement.⁸⁶⁵ Mrs Middleton presented the case in favour of NO-F77 and NO-F76's continued registration, and no one presented the opposing view.⁸⁶⁶ The panel agreed unanimously that NO-F77 and NO-F76 should be reapproved. No consideration was given to reassessment of NO-F77's continued suitability to foster,⁸⁶⁷ although the couple were to receive training on "sexual safety".⁸⁶⁸

52.7. In 2012, NO-F77 was witnessed exposing himself to a five-year-old foster child and another fostered child then disclosed that she had been sexually abused by him. By this time, NO-F77 and NO-F76 had fostered over 30 children. NO-F77 was suspended from fostering by the County and multi-agency strategy and planning meetings were held.⁸⁶⁹

52.8. An internal practice review was carried out in October 2012 and was critical of the County's response.⁸⁷⁰

- The supervision of NO-F77 and NO-F76 was undertaken by the same social worker (Mrs Middleton) from 1988 until 2010:

"The relationship ... was much too focused on support to the carers and when allegations were made the response was to defend the carers ... there was intolerance to receiving information that contradicted accepted and long established beliefs about the competence and capacity of the carers".⁸⁷¹

- Safeguarding procedures should have been invoked on a number of occasions, but the supervision of NO-F77 and NO-F76 by children's social care was poor.⁸⁷²
- There was a general assumption that once a carer was approved, they would be trusted. This approach presented a "risk of abuse to children".⁸⁷³
- There was a need for children in care to have access to systems for raising concerns and complaints.

"The strongest measure for safeguarding children is to ensure that every looked after child understands how to raise concerns, is given access and support to talk to people and can have confidence that their concerns will be treated seriously irrespective of their history and background."⁸⁷⁴

- Much of the file records concentrated on the difficulties children were presenting to the carers, rather than any challenge to the foster carers or focus on what they were doing.⁸⁷⁵

- The fostering panel’s decision in 2000 was “flawed and unwise”. The panel were provided with imbalanced information, influenced by the “defensive alliance” supporting NO-F77 and NO-F76.⁸⁷⁶

The report made six recommendations,⁸⁷⁷ including to ensure independent oversight of the management of complaints and concerns, and to bring forward proposals for rotating supervision of foster carers. The County considered the feasibility of the latter recommendation in October 2012 and concluded that instead of automatic rotation of supervising social workers, there should be routine consideration of a supervising social worker’s involvement with foster carers.⁸⁷⁸

52.9. The findings of the internal practice review were regarded as “extremely concerning” by senior managers in children’s social care.⁸⁷⁹ We would have expected Phil Morgan’s conduct to have been subject to a disciplinary investigation, as should that of Mrs Middleton had she still been employed.

53. The case of NO-F77 illustrated a culture within certain fostering teams that the interests of foster carers outweighed those of the children placed in their care. In NO-F77’s case, it meant that he was allowed to go on to abuse other fostered children.

54. These examples highlighted significant failures in practice. Although it ultimately led to the two foster carers being deregistered and convicted, no action was taken against the supervising children’s social care staff. In response to the Gallagher and NO-F77 cases, in 2012 the County sought to evaluate its approach to its foster care practice by commissioning an external independent audit of 19 cases of allegations against foster carers, of which six cases caused “some concern”.⁸⁸⁰ The audit concluded there was a lack of robust management within the fostering service. It also identified cases in which procedures were not followed, recording was inadequate and there were unexplained delays in responding to allegations.

55. Subsequent audits were then carried out into randomly selected foster carer files in January 2013. The audits recorded good adherence to most policies, procedures and national minimum standards, but noted there were some problems with supervision visits and a lack of unannounced visits.⁸⁸¹ Jayne Austin (Fostering Service Manager) responded to the audit reports’ criticisms in a report in May 2013, pointing out what she considered as good practice that was ongoing.⁸⁸²

56. In June 2013, NO-F77 and NO-F76 were deregistered following the unanimous recommendation of the fostering panel.⁸⁸³ The panel noted that had full information been provided in 2000 (for example the allegations in 1995 and 1998) the outcome would have been different at that time. In January 2014, NO-F77 was sentenced to eight months’ imprisonment.⁸⁸⁴

57. In 2016, further allegations against NO-F77 were made, this time by NO-A302.⁸⁸⁵ The Crown Prosecution Service decided not to prosecute,⁸⁸⁶ but strategy meetings found the allegations substantiated. There was a delay in informing NO-A302 of this due to concern about conflict between the County's safeguarding process and perceived risks of civil claims.⁸⁸⁷

58. In 2011 and 2012, there were two cases in which the County's fostering service and fostering panel considered there to be too much risk for them to allow the foster carers to continue fostering. This was different from the approach of the Independent Review Mechanism (IRM) panel, which focused more on the consequences of any decision for the foster carer and whether the allegations could be substantiated.⁸⁸⁸

58.1. In August 2010, allegations of sexual abuse in foster care were made against NO-F165. The police and children's social care agreed that the allegations were credible, but in December 2010 the Crown Prosecution Service decided not to prosecute. In June 2011, NO-F165 was deregistered following the unanimous recommendation of the fostering panel.⁸⁸⁹ In response to NO-F165's appeal against deregistration, in October 2011, the IRM panel recommended that his approval to foster should continue, having found that the County had disregarded the views of an experienced social worker who knew the carers well and that there were "serious flaws in the child protection investigation". It concluded that the reason for refusal appeared to have been based on children's social care's best interests, rather than their "duty of care" to NO-F165. The IRM panel did not refer to risk, which should have been the primary concern when considering safeguarding.⁸⁹⁰ In light of the IRM's recommendation, the County's 'Agency Decision Maker'⁸⁹¹ decided that NO-F165 and his wife were suitable to continue as foster carers, although training and careful supervision were required.⁸⁹²

58.2. Following harmful sexual behaviour between two children in different foster families in 2012, the foster carers of the child exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour were deregistered due to their failure to properly assess the risk posed by the child exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour. In 2013, the IRM panel again recommended that the decision be reversed, and that the foster carers be allowed to continue fostering.⁸⁹³ This recommendation was rejected; the deregistration was upheld on the grounds of flawed management of risk, lack of trust and "serious failure to safeguard both your own looked after child and another looked after child in spite of knowing the risks posed, resulting in serious harm".⁸⁹⁴

⁸⁸⁸ Since 2009, foster carers who are deregistered can appeal to the Independent Review Mechanism – a statutory body currently run by Coram Children's Legal Centre on behalf of the DfE. IRM panels will include a minimum of five members, who have professional or personal expertise in adoption or fostering (Independent Review of Determinations (Adoption and Fostering) Regulations 2009).

⁸⁹¹ An Agency Decision Maker is someone employed by a fostering service provider (such as a local authority) to make the final decision about whether to approve or continue to approve a foster carer (and if so, on what terms) following a recommendation by the fostering panel (INQ001853 paras 2:5).

59. Following these cases, there were a number of other allegations of sexual abuse in foster care. The responses showed failures in joint working, including inconsistent approaches to decision-making, cases not being passed by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service for a charging decision, cases not always being referred to the fostering panel, and apparent failures to notify Ofsted or councillors.

59.1. In 2012, NO-A161 disclosed that she was sexually abused by her foster carer, NO-F35. The police considered there was insufficient evidence to pass the case to the Crown Prosecution Service and the multi-agency strategy meetings concluded that the allegation was “unfounded”. NO-F35 was able to continue fostering without the required referral to the fostering panel to assess his continued suitability.⁸⁹⁵ Further allegations against NO-F35 were made by NO-A160 in 2014. By this time there were around 10 allegations of sexual abuse against him (including those by NO-A159 in 2007⁸⁹⁶). The police considered the allegations to be unsubstantiated and decided to take no further action without referral to the Crown Prosecution Service. Despite this, the City took a thorough approach to evaluating the risk posed by NO-F35, and commissioned the NSPCC to carry out an independent investigation and risk assessment. This concluded in March 2015 that NO-F35 posed an unacceptable level of sexual risk and should not be allowed to care for vulnerable children.⁸⁹⁷ In August 2015, further allegations of sexual abuse against NO-F35 were made by NO-A159 and NO-A163. These allegations were regarded as credible and the Crown Prosecution Service decided to charge NO-F35.⁸⁹⁸ In May 2016, the fostering panel unanimously recommended termination of NO-F35’s registration as a foster carer.⁸⁹⁹ In 2017, he was acquitted of all charges.

59.2. In May 2015, a child in foster care (NO-A779) with the City disclosed to her teacher that she had been in a sexually abusive relationship with a 27-year-old male when she was aged 15.⁹⁰⁰ Her foster mother was aware of the sexually abusive relationship but decided not to report it as she had wanted to deal it with ‘like a “normal” family’. It was decided that the foster carer was suitable to continue as a foster carer, and that it was in NO-A779 and her sister’s best interests to continue in the placement given the need for stability. The matter was never referred, as recommended in the foster carer review, to the fostering panel to consider the carer’s continued approval.⁹⁰¹ This was questioned by the fostering panel following the foster carer’s resignation in January 2017.⁹⁰²

59.3. In December 2016, NO-A104 alleged to children’s social care that he had been sexually abused by his former foster mother, NO-F80, in the 1980s.⁹⁰³ The Crown Prosecution Service received legal advice from external counsel that NO-F80 was unlikely to be convicted, despite the complaint being credible, because NO-A104 had previous convictions, a troubled background, mental health issues and had made a number of allegations. Sue Matthews, the Crown Prosecutor, decided not to charge NO-F80.⁹⁰⁴ The County's subsequent decision that the allegations were unsubstantiated had not, it was said, been influenced by the Crown Prosecution Service decision.⁹⁰⁵

⁸⁹⁷ NO-F35 had said, as part of the assessment, that sexually abused children could prevent the abuse from happening, that some were capable of leading adults on and that some make up allegations for attention (NCC000316_1:11; NCC000593_48:55).

59.4. In September 2017, allegations of sexual abuse were made by a child placed in 2015 against his previous foster carers, NO-F423 and NO-F424.⁹⁰⁶ There was an initial failure to hold an emergency strategy meeting and, although contact was made with the police and the complainant was interviewed, children's social care told the foster carers about the allegations two days before the police saw them. Following a meeting of the fostering panel in May 2018, NO-F423 and NO-F424 were deregistered as foster carers. In February 2019, the Crown Prosecution Service decided not to charge the alleged perpetrators. We have no evidence as to whether the case has been considered for a child safeguarding practice review or if a notifiable incident form was sent to Ofsted. Councillor David Mellen was not formally notified but was told by Alison Michalska during a meeting which was not minuted.⁹⁰⁷

59.5. In December 2017, NO-A626 alleged that he had been sexually abused by his foster carer, NO-F292. The allegations were considered to be unsubstantiated following a multi-agency strategy discussion and a joint police and children's social care investigation. Notwithstanding this conclusion, in February 2018, the County followed the serious incident notification process by notifying Ofsted, and the fostering panel was to review NO-F292's approval as a foster carer.⁹⁰⁸

60. The extent of sexual abuse in foster care in the 1970s and 1980s was compounded by poor decision-making in those cases where disclosure had been made. Some known perpetrators were permitted to remain as foster carers and then went on to abuse again. Despite the County's assessment of the prevalence of sexual abuse for children in foster care in the early 1990s, David White, the Director of Social Services, failed to take any effective action.

Case study: Harmful sexual behaviour

E.1: Introduction

1. The investigation's third case study examines the institutional responses to, and barriers to disclosure of, allegations of harmful sexual behaviour between children in the care of the Councils.⁹⁰⁹ The Inquiry has been assisted with these issues by Professor Simon Hackett, Professor of Child Abuse and Neglect at Durham University, an expert on harmful sexual behaviour between children.⁹¹⁰
2. In this report, we use the term 'harmful sexual behaviour' to refer to sexual abuse between children, whether children of different ages or children of a similar age. This reflects Professor Hackett's view that this behaviour may be harmful to others but also to the child responsible for that harm, and it is therefore less stigmatising than other terms.⁹¹¹

E.2: Allegations of harmful sexual behaviour in Nottinghamshire

3. The Inquiry has received 95 accounts⁹¹² of harmful sexual behaviour, including:
 - 3.1. P16 was sexually abused, including rape, by another child in a children's home "some decades ago". He ran away, becoming a victim of child sexual exploitation.⁹¹³
 - 3.2. P7 was sexually abused by another child in her foster home in the 1970s, who threatened to disclose that she was being abused by the foster father. P7 was scared that this would lead to her being taken away from her two siblings.⁹¹⁴
 - 3.3. P3 was sexually assaulted by a male resident at a children's home in 1978. She described the continuing effects of the abuse: "Sometimes when I meet men, they know I've been abused and they ask me if I have been a prostitute. They assume that I have because I have been abused. This makes me feel really confused; as if my abuse has made me worthless".⁹¹⁵
 - 3.4. A76 was raped twice by one older boy and sexually assaulted by another in a children's home in the 1970s and 1980s.⁹¹⁶

- 3.6. P1 was sexually assaulted by the son of his foster carers in the 1980s, including forced oral sex.⁹¹⁸
- 3.7. L46 was sexually assaulted by a female resident at a children's home in 1987, who inserted her finger into L46's anus in the course of bullying her. This was recorded in her social services records.⁹¹⁹
- 3.8. D31 was sexually abused on around five different occasions by older boys at Greencroft Community Home between 1989 and 1991, including sexual assault and rape.⁹²⁰
- 3.9. D46 was sexually abused by two older boys at a children's home in the 1990s.⁹²¹
- 3.10. L43 was sexually abused at Beechwood in 2002, by another resident who was one year older than him. This included attempted anal rape and sexual touching. He reported the abuse but felt unsafe and confused. He described the impact of the abuse as "everlasting".⁹²²

E.3: Understanding harmful sexual behaviour

4. Professor Hackett's expert view was that there are a number of key points to assist in understanding harmful sexual behaviour:

- 4.1. A child presenting with harmful sexual behaviour is likely to act it out to varying degrees over a period of time. That behaviour might range from normal and "developmentally appropriate" on the one hand and "highly abnormal and violent" on the other. Understanding this range can help professionals to respond appropriately to the risk presented by that behaviour.⁹²³
- 4.2. Though in each case intervention is needed,⁹²⁴ it is important to distinguish between: (i) 'abusive' sexual behaviours that are manipulative or coercive where the victim is unable to give informed consent and (ii) 'problematic' sexual behaviours that have no intended victim but which may have a developmental impact on the children exhibiting the behaviour or cause them rejection or distress, or increase the risk of their victimisation.⁹²⁵
- 4.3. Harmful sexual behaviour exhibited by younger children should be approached differently to that exhibited by adolescent children. Younger children's behaviour is more likely to be a direct consequence of having been abused.⁹²⁶

4.4. A history of having been sexually abused is one of several possible pathways which may lead to harmful sexual behaviour. Around half of those children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour have themselves previously been sexually abused.⁹²⁷ However, of children who are victims of all kinds of abuse, the vast majority do not go on to sexually abuse others, and victims should not be labelled as potential abusers. Trauma, suffered through other experiences as well as sexual abuse, is a key indicator and causal factor for many children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour.⁹²⁸ Another pathway is general anti-social attitudes and beliefs which can link with sexual bullying.⁹²⁹ There are examples where harmful sexual behaviour appears to have been part of a culture of bullying and inappropriate behaviour.⁹³⁰

4.5. Most children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour no longer do so by their mid-twenties. Previous assumptions about adolescent sexual offending being ‘addictive’ are not borne out by recent studies.⁹³¹

4.6. Children abused by their peers are more likely to be abused by a group than by an individual. One incident of being abused by a group may lead to “a kind of chain effect” of further abuse by other members of the group.⁹³²

4.7. The fact that children have exhibited, or been the victims of, harmful sexual behaviour may be identified by adult perpetrators who “pick out” those vulnerabilities and use them to abuse the child.⁹³³

The prevalence of harmful sexual behaviour

5. It is generally accepted that up to two-thirds of allegations of child sexual abuse are made against young people under the age of 18.⁹³⁴ Figures from 2017 show almost 30,000 reports of harmful sexual behaviour over the previous four years in England and Wales, with annual figures almost doubling in that time.⁹³⁵ The “overwhelming majority” of cases of children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour do not result in a prosecution or caution.⁹³⁶ Around half of sexual abuse cases in residential care are of harmful sexual behaviour.⁹³⁷

6. However, these numbers are likely to be an under-representation of the true scale. This is a result of the barriers to reporting, the variable ways of recording harmful sexual behaviour, and because the issue has only relatively recently been acknowledged and understood.⁹³⁸ In Professor Hackett’s view, there is a “high likelihood that peer sexual abuse in care has been downplayed by professionals who have seen it as exploratory adolescent sexual behaviour”.⁹³⁹

7. Many accounts of abuse reviewed by this Inquiry were given in interviews during Operations Daybreak, Xeres and Equinox or in disciplinary cases, none of which focused on allegations of harmful sexual behaviour.

Harmful sexual behaviour in relation to children in care

8. Harmful sexual behaviour between children in care has not been extensively researched, despite a large number of children exhibiting such behaviours subsequently entering the care system.⁹⁴⁰ In Professor Hackett's view, the mistaken belief that most children who commit sexual offences will continue to do so through adolescence and into adulthood has led to an "overly risk-averse approach" to children coming into care who had previously exhibited harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁴¹ The "developing sexuality and sexual behaviour" of children in care is often subject to scrutiny in a way in which children in the family home is not, so there can be an assumption that they are more prone to exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁴² However, for some children, coming into care can stop further harmful sexual behaviour, as they will have been removed from an abusive or sexualised home environment.⁹⁴³ This does not remove the need for a robust risk assessment when making placement decisions and formulating care plans in all cases in which a child has exhibited harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁴⁴

9. Professor Hackett has produced a model showing the relevance of the care environment and the attitudes and responses of staff in understanding harmful sexual behaviour.

E.4: Policy and practice developments in Nottinghamshire

10. The Councils' understanding of and approach to harmful sexual behaviour mirrors, to a large extent, the national picture. In 1990, the County was aware that a significant number of children known to be exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour were in its children's homes.⁹⁴⁵ 1970s and 1980s

11. The County's first Policy, Procedure and Practice Guide for Community Homes in April 1978 included guidance on responding to children in care suspected of involvement in unlawful sexual intercourse.⁹⁴⁶ Rod Jones, Senior Professional Officer (Child Care), clarified the guidance later that year:

*"Clearly where this is experimental horseplay (for want of better words) there is no question of the Police needing to be involved ... Where a child has been the subject of U.S.I. or serious homosexual or other activity and the staff have good reason to believe that an offence has been committed – then the policy is that the Area Director should consider informing the Police immediately. As I understand it, the policy also states that only the Divisional Director has the power to agree to withhold information from the Police."*⁹⁴⁷

A context continuum model of care settings and harmful sexual behaviour

12. Following an internal inquiry into an allegation of harmful sexual behaviour at Amberdale Secure Unit in 1988 (discussed further below), a multi-agency Adolescent Sex Offenders Group was created and met from October 1989 “to develop services designed to address the risks presented by male adolescent sex offenders”.⁹⁴⁸

13. Between March and September 1990, the Adolescent Sex Offenders Group undertook a range of work regarding harmful sexual behaviour and made a number of findings:

13.1. An increasingly high level of reporting of sexual offences carried out by adolescents,⁹⁴⁹ as shown for example by a snapshot⁹⁵⁰ of 380 children resident in children’s homes in Nottinghamshire on one particular day in June 1990. This found:

- 32 children (8 percent) had been sexually abused by other residents (of those 26 had also been sexually abused before entering care and six were sexually abused for the first time by other residents);
- out of 79 children (21 percent) who had been sexually abused before entering care, 16 had gone on to sexually abuse other residents;
- 23 children (6 percent) had been placed in care having already committed sexual offences; and
- 15 children (4 percent) committed a first sexual offence whilst in care.

David White, the County’s then Director of Social Services, was “astounded to find the number who had been subjected to abuse ... However we’re probably not untypical of Departments generally.”⁹⁵¹

13.2. A “lack of departmental and multi-professional guidelines and resources” which meant that “what happens in each case is a matter of chance”.⁹⁵²

The group proposed setting up a new unit to work with adolescent sex offenders and sought the implementation of guidelines for staff,⁹⁵³ and joint police and children’s social care investigations in response to allegations of harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁵⁴ Although the placement of abused children alongside children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour was common practice across England and Wales in the 1990s,⁹⁵⁵ the group recommended in 1990 that “adolescent sex offenders should no longer be housed with other children without very careful consideration of the risks”. It also provided a definition of “sexual abuse by juveniles” and identified an “urgent” need to develop treatment services for young offenders.⁹⁵⁶

14. The 1991 Area Child Protection Committee (ACPC) procedures in Nottinghamshire appear to have drawn on the group's work (as well as on the national Working Together guidance in 1991, which referred for the first time to harmful sexual behaviour⁹⁵⁷). The procedures included guidance on 'Abuse between children and young people'. Those exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour were to be seen as children who may have been abused, and placement decisions had to take into account the risks they posed to other children. Joint investigation procedures were to apply to allegations of harmful sexual behaviour in children's homes.⁹⁵⁸

15. A "landmark" National Children's Home report about harmful sexual behaviour in England, Wales and Scotland, published in 1992, considered for the first time on a wide scale the issue of children and young people who sexually abuse other children.⁹⁵⁹ It noted "an absence of policy, practice or ethical guidance to assist practitioners" with young people demonstrating harmful sexual behaviour, and that much sexually abusive behaviour went unreported or unrecognised, or was simply not formally dealt with by the criminal justice system. A model was proposed to establish the range of sexual behaviours which a child could demonstrate.⁹⁶⁰

16. The 1991 ACPC procedures highlighted the need to consider risks around placement because of concern about harmful sexual behaviour between children in residential care.⁹⁶¹ Despite this, in 1992, a County working party report entitled 'As if they were our own': Raising the Quality of Residential Child Care in Nottinghamshire concluded that a failure to monitor admissions into residential care had led to:

"young people who have been sexually abused being placed at risk by being accommodated with young people who have committed sexually abusive acts".⁹⁶²

It found that 80 percent of sexual abuse within community homes was committed by young male residents against young female residents.⁹⁶³

17. The report noted that the work of the Adolescent Sex Offenders Group in monitoring those exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour and providing them with treatment had "helped to project Nottinghamshire as a lead Authority in recognising and responding" to their needs.⁹⁶⁴ The working party recommended an additional "systematic and informed service" for adolescent sex offenders, but funds were withdrawn three weeks before the service was due to start.⁹⁶⁵ This was despite the report's warning that:

"In the absence of such a service the problem continues to increase with real cost to the young people, both offenders and victims, and the possibility of the County Council being held liable for claims of compensation becomes more concerning."⁹⁶⁶

18. By this point, two years on from the 1990 survey,⁹⁶⁷ 'As if they were our own' included some statistics on the 285 children in residential care:

- 90 children (32 percent) had been sexually abused before coming into care;
- 11 children (4 percent) had been placed in care as having been abused and were subsequently abused by other residents whilst in care; and
- five children (2 percent) had been sexually abused for the first time by other residents whilst in care.⁹⁶⁸

19. In 1997, an ACPC project on 'Children who sexually abuse other children' reviewed 57 alleged incidents of harmful sexual behaviour in the County over a six-month period, four of which involved children in residential care.⁹⁶⁹ Responses to harmful sexual behaviour remained inconsistent.⁹⁷⁰ Although most cases had been referred for investigation, in some child protection procedures had not been followed. It proposed "further briefing or training".⁹⁷¹ In a March 1997 progress report to the ACPC, the Project Manager drew attention to the fact that "the scale of the problem" of harmful sexual behaviour was "bigger than initially thought", and that there was "no consistent approach for dealing with these children". She proposed setting up a panel with the aim of diverting children away from the criminal justice system.⁹⁷² By 1998, "both the City and the County each had established their own respective panels" (subsequently known as assessment and early intervention panels),⁹⁷³ to which the majority of cases were referred, usually by the police or children's social care.⁹⁷⁴

20. The County's Child Protection Practice Guidance was also updated in 1997, in relation to responses and support to both victims of and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour. It also included guidelines on what was 'normal' sexual experimentation and what was abusive.⁹⁷⁵ However, this does not appear to have been accompanied by training for residential care staff or foster carers.⁹⁷⁶

21. National interagency procedures and a practice framework for assessing children and young people with harmful sexual behaviour (Assessment Intervention and Moving On (AIM)) were introduced in 2000.⁹⁷⁷ The framework became best practice and was in use by the Councils by the mid-2000s.⁹⁷⁸

22. By 2005, the County was carrying out risk assessments of children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour,⁹⁷⁹ which were provided to the foster or residential home where the child was being placed.⁹⁸⁰ The County's process changed in 2006,⁹⁸¹ from local individual assessment and early intervention panels to a strategy meeting approach with multi-agency planning and assessment. The assessment evaluated the level of risk posed by children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour to other children in the same household or establishment including younger or more vulnerable children.⁹⁸²

23. Over the next few years, the City funded a part-time post in relation to harmful sexual behaviour⁹⁸³ and sought to intervene early to prevent future incidents.⁹⁸⁴ In practice, a large number of children arrested for sexual offences in the City were still not being referred to the assessment and early intervention panel. There was substantial delay in referring cases and, where cases were referred, the panel often had little or no information about the victim or the impact of abuse.⁹⁸⁵ The panel could only recommend, rather than direct, that children's social care take decisions, including the placement of children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁸⁶ Although police attendance was "a useful and effective process ensuring best outcomes for victims and alleged young perpetrators",⁹⁸⁷ it was infrequent.⁹⁸⁸

24. Since 2007, the Councils' safeguarding boards have produced cross-authority guidance on 'Children who display sexually harmful behaviour'.⁹⁸⁹

National developments

25. In 2013, a Criminal Justice Joint Inspection⁹⁹⁰ identified concerns about the effectiveness of multi-agency working with children and young people who had committed sexual offences. It found little evidence of oversight, gaps between policy, procedures and practice, and no evidence that implementation of procedures had been monitored or reviewed.⁹⁹¹

26. Professor Hackett referred to 2014 research which suggested that victims of sexual abuse and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour were still being placed together, even though placement providers had become more aware of the need to "look very carefully" at risks presented by young people when making placement decisions.⁹⁹²

27. In 2015, following unsuccessful attempts to formulate a national strategy, the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) developed, in conjunction with some local authorities,⁹⁹³ an Operational Framework⁹⁹⁴ for harmful sexual behaviour to help

⁹⁸² The new approach was set out in the County's 2006 'Practice Guidance on Children and Young People who Sexually Harm' (NSC001151; NSC001586).

Between 2007 and 2013, we saw no evidence of steps taken by the County to monitor its own practice or the implementation of its procedures. The City's AEIP produced annual reports but none appeared to consider or evaluate the effectiveness of policies and procedures.

local authorities structure their interagency response to the issue.⁹⁹⁵ Professor Hackett considered this a “really important step forward”, giving local agencies the ability to audit their harmful sexual behaviour practice against the Framework and promote standard practice in assessment, in the availability of intervention services and in training.⁹⁹⁶

28. Guidance and advice on harmful sexual behaviour have been published in recent years by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence⁹⁹⁷ and by the Department for Education,⁹⁹⁸ and awareness and procedures have improved. However, “there is still no national strategy” or model for local authorities to use in addressing harmful sexual behaviour.⁹⁹⁹ In Professor Hackett’s view, there is a need for an “overarching strategy that actually brings together some of these principles in an overarching national framework”.¹⁰⁰⁰

The County

29. Chris Few, chair of the County’s Local Safeguarding Children Board,¹⁰⁰¹ recognised that the County’s approach to harmful sexual behaviour, as at October 2018, was not as he would wish.¹⁰⁰² Nevertheless, in recent years, the County has taken steps to audit its practice, quality assure its work and develop multi-agency responses to harmful sexual behaviour cases. The 2016 audit (using the NSPCC framework) found that residential staff and foster carers were trained and able to support children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour, but that the County had no overall picture of the scale of harmful sexual behaviour or the efficacy of its response. Recommendations included setting up an annual data return on children who sexually harm, a multi-agency audit on harmful sexual behaviour practice and the introduction of the Brook Sexual Harm Traffic Light Tool.¹⁰⁰³ The Traffic Light Tool is a step-by-step guide to assist professionals in understanding whether behaviour is abusive, problematic or appropriate, and to inform the appropriate interventions.¹⁰⁰⁴

30. A multi-agency audit in May 2018 examined 10 cases of harmful sexual behaviour in the County, two of which involved children in residential care. This found delays in identifying and responding to harmful sexual behaviour, inconsistent advice given to children and their carers, an over-dependence on police decision-making, and a lack of understanding of the purpose and use of the AIM assessment. Recommendations included aligning practice across agencies, reworking local guidance and developing a model to quality-assure cases involving harmful sexual behaviour.¹⁰⁰⁵ Chris Few assured us that the County’s Harmful Sexual Behaviour Panel¹⁰⁰⁶ was working on the audit’s recommendations and the issues it had raised.¹⁰⁰⁷ At the time of our hearings, an action plan was still being implemented to respond to the 2016 and 2018 audit recommendations. While a number of actions had been completed (including the introduction of the Brook Sexual Harm Traffic Light Tool), annual data on children who had been sexually harmed had yet to be collated and the development of new procedures and protocols was still ongoing.¹⁰⁰⁸ The County held training in 2019 on harmful sexual behaviour for all practitioners working directly with children and young people and the training team were “overwhelmed with interest”.¹⁰⁰⁹

31. As of October 2018, the County notifies incidents of harmful sexual behaviour to the Service Director¹⁰¹⁰ and the Lead Member for Children’s Services,¹⁰¹¹ as well as Ofsted, local safeguarding partners and the national Child Safeguarding Practice Review Panel.¹⁰¹² However, on some occasions in the past the notification process was not followed.¹⁰¹³

The City

32. As at October 2018, the City’s Assessment and Early Intervention Panel – renamed the Assessment of Sexual Harm Arrangements (ASHA) panel in 2014¹⁰¹⁴ – met monthly.¹⁰¹⁵ Its remit, since 2017, has broadened to include those whose behaviour suggested they might sexually harm other children as well as those who had done so.¹⁰¹⁶ Although Clive Chambers (the City’s Head of Service for Children in Care) told us that the City’s approach mirrors the NSPCC’s framework,¹⁰¹⁷ we have not seen evidence to support this or of steps taken to understand the extent of harmful sexual behaviour exhibited by or carried out against children in the care of the City or to audit their practice.¹⁰¹⁸

33. The City’s Lead Member for Children’s Services until May 2019, Councillor David Mellen, thought that it was less likely he would be informed of a case of harmful sexual behaviour, in contrast to other sexual abuse,¹⁰¹⁹ and he had no sense of the scale of harmful sexual behaviour in the City.¹⁰²⁰

E.5: Institutional responses

34. There is little information now available about the approach adopted by children’s social care or the police towards harmful sexual behaviour for much of the 1970s and early 1980s. Some incidents were recorded in children’s social services files but treated as behavioural problems or adolescent exploration.¹⁰²¹ As Professor Hackett commented, while even good carers and professionals may not have understood harmful sexual behaviour at this time, they should still have been concerned about the sexual wellbeing and behaviour of children in care.¹⁰²²

35. The County accepted that it had “let down” a number of children who had been sexually abused by other children.¹⁰²³ To explore the institutional response, we have reviewed five internal enquiries, carried out between 1988 and 1995, into allegations of harmful sexual behaviour at different community homes in the County.

36. In December 1987, two female residents of Amberdale alleged that they had been forced into oral sex by a male resident, aged 15. Their allegations were investigated by the police.¹⁰²⁴ In January 1988 the same male resident attempted to sexually assault another female resident, and three further allegations of harmful sexual behaviour followed over the next few days. As a result, there were “real fears for the safety and security of females in the unit”.¹⁰²⁵ Despite this, no steps were taken by residential staff or social care managers to address the immediate risk of sexual abuse of other children and the harmful sexual behaviour was regarded as simply part of a pattern of disruptive behaviour.¹⁰²⁶ In March 1988, the child was removed from the unit and placed outside of Nottinghamshire.¹⁰²⁷

37. In 1988, NO-A117, a 13-year-old male resident at Amberdale, made allegations of rape and oral sex against another male resident of the same age.¹⁰²⁸ The child alleged to be exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour had been admitted to Amberdale following allegations that he had committed buggery and murder. As children in the secure unit were closely supervised, no special arrangements had been considered necessary to separate children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour from other residents.¹⁰²⁹

38. NO-A117’s allegations were escalated to children’s social care, the placing local authority for each child, the police, councillors and the Department of Health Inspectorate. The child alleged to be exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour had allegedly threatened to kill NO-A117 if he told anyone of the abuse. Steps were taken to divide the unit to separate the two children. This proved to be unsustainable and the child alleged to be exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour was moved.¹⁰³⁰ Despite supportive medical evidence and a consistent statement from NO-A117, the police concluded there was insufficient evidence to proceed “in the absence of any corroborative evidence”.¹⁰³¹ The internal enquiry commenced in December 1988. In interview, staff said that they did not believe NO-A117. The investigation concluded that “the truth will probably never be known”, but that children’s social care’s response had been “appropriate” and “in keeping with good child care practice, embracing important principles guiding work with sexually abused children”.¹⁰³² Recommendations included training and guidelines “to assist residential staff when they have to deal with allegations of sexual abuse between children and young people in residential care”.¹⁰³³ Although the findings and recommendations were endorsed by councillors,¹⁰³⁴ they were not passed on to Amberdale staff.¹⁰³⁵ Recommended training did not take place¹⁰³⁶ and guidelines were only introduced in 1991¹⁰³⁷ (by which time further harmful sexual behaviour cases in residential care had been reported).

Greencroft Community Home (1990)

39. In May 1990, children’s social care management and residential staff from Greencroft Community Home (which could accommodate up to 12 children, up to 17 years old)¹⁰³⁸ met to discuss “kids being abused by kids”.¹⁰³⁹ They discussed possible ways to protect children, including the need for ongoing counselling, for children’s inductions to include a discussion about sex and sexuality, and the deployment of waking night staff.

40. In July 1990, at which point eight of the nine Greencroft residents had been sexually abused previously,¹⁰⁴⁰ two incidents of harmful sexual behaviour, three weeks apart, were reported. The first incident involved a 15-year-old male resident allegedly sexually abusing four girls aged between seven and 16 in one night.¹⁰⁴¹ The police were involved and recommended charging the male resident.¹⁰⁴² The second incident involved one of the same four girls being sexually assaulted by a different male resident.¹⁰⁴³

41. One of the victims, D31 (then aged 12), told us that these were just two of a series of five incidents of harmful sexual behaviour to which she was subjected by the same male residents and others.¹⁰⁴⁴ She had been placed at Greencroft with much older children¹⁰⁴⁵ which, along with a failure to monitor risks posed by other children and a lack of guidance for staff,¹⁰⁴⁶ left her at risk of abuse.

42. An internal enquiry reported, in September 1990, that “widespread changes” were needed across all children’s homes to contain “the problem of child abuse” and give children “the protection and help they need”.¹⁰⁴⁷ Children’s social care were “overburdened” and responses to child sexual abuse had “fallen far short of what is needed”.¹⁰⁴⁸ It was “unacceptable” and dangerous to mix together sexually abused children with children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour,¹⁰⁴⁹ and there was no guidance on how to deal with either group.¹⁰⁵⁰ More generally, advice on the response to abuse was “based on a premise of trained, skilled professional staff, whereas less than 10% of the staff are trained and many are temporary and inexperienced”.¹⁰⁵¹ The report made 20 recommendations, including that:¹⁰⁵²

The Social Services Committee approved separating victims of sexual abuse and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour, with one community home to be designated for work with children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour and another exclusively for sexually abused girls.¹⁰⁵⁵ These recommendations were not fully implemented by the County.¹⁰⁵⁶

Sandown Road Community Home (1990–1991)

43. In 1990, in the course of a police investigation, two residents at Sandown Road Community Home admitted sexually assaulting and raping other residents at the home. One was cautioned and the other was given a supervision order.¹⁰⁵⁷ One of their victims (NO-A120) had also been anally raped by a different resident six months earlier. A safe and secure placement for the victims could only be found outside the County.¹⁰⁵⁸

44. The County failed to prevent or respond appropriately to widespread sexual abuse at Sandown Road. A 1991 internal enquiry into the quality of child care at Sandown Road by senior social workers from the County found that children’s social care staff:

*“were very concerned by the sense of inevitability that any child admitted was subject to sexual abuse or involved in inappropriate sexual activities. In one 12 month period, every child admitted was involved in sexual abuse incidents whether they had been previously abused or not. This does not appear to have been a problem since April of this year.”*¹⁰⁵⁹

Staff had reported concerns about the management of disclosures, that staff meetings had not addressed how to manage abused children and “the needs of the individual children in terms of counselling and protection were forgotten”.¹⁰⁶⁰ Social workers were concerned that “staff had not been able to prevent” the “high levels of sexual abuse”.¹⁰⁶¹ Requests for training and support for staff had not been responded to by Paul Bohan, Senior Professional Officer within the County at the time.¹⁰⁶²

45. Sandown Road was temporarily closed that year, in line with the report’s recommendations. Although the Social Services Committee were informed of the closure, there is no record of how much they were told of the abuse suffered by some of the children and staff concerns.¹⁰⁶³

¹⁰⁵³ NSC000102_20, 32. This echoed a similar recommendation made by the Adolescent Sex Offenders Group earlier that year.

46. There is no evidence of anyone within children’s social care considering this report alongside the Greencroft and Amberdale reports despite those reports raising similar issues. Co-author of the Sandown Road report, Sue Gregory (Senior Social Worker at the time), told us that when writing the report, she was unaware of the similar issues that had been raised in the Greencroft report the previous year.¹⁰⁶⁴ This lack of information sharing was poor practice.

Hazelwood Community Home (1991–1994)

47. A former resident of Hazelwood (another community home), NO-A89, alleged in 1991 that he had been raped by three other residents at the home in 1985.¹⁰⁶⁵ The other residents were aged between 11 and 15 years old.¹⁰⁶⁶ It was known to staff in 1985 that NO-A89 had suffered serious physical abuse by other residents “with potentially sexual content”.¹⁰⁶⁷ At the time, the other residents had remained at Hazelwood and staff were not warned of the risk they posed to other children.¹⁰⁶⁸

48. Tony Dewhurst (a children’s social care manager in the County, whose role at the time included supervision of and advice to management at Hazelwood) was said to have been aware of the rape according to NO-A89’s social worker at the time,¹⁰⁶⁹ although Mr Dewhurst told us that he could not remember being informed about it.¹⁰⁷⁰ Mr Dewhurst had also allegedly described one incident involving NO-A89 as “normal adolescent behaviour”,¹⁰⁷¹ however it is unclear whether this related to the rape or to physical abuse suffered by NO-A89. He did notify the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) of the allegation in November 1991, saying that “lessons ... have been learnt”. The SSI responded that “The general question of whether community homes in Nottinghamshire are safe places in which children can live is clearly the most important factor.”¹⁰⁷²

49. In 1992, NO-A89’s social worker and his key worker at the time of the 1985 assaults voiced their “extreme concern” to David White, the Director of Social Services, about the abuse and the response to it, including the disappearance of files, the failure to investigate staff and children’s social care’s failure to take responsibility for the harm caused to young people in the care system.¹⁰⁷³

50. At a meeting in August 1992 between County legal and insurance officers and a children’s social care manager, they agreed that:

“there was basically no discipline in this particular home, no action was taken against the perpetrators, there was no psychological help for [NO-A89] and the records of all the incidents have since been destroyed”.

It was agreed that a working party within the County should consider various issues, including “segregation of abusers and abused or males/females” and the reporting of incidents of abuse¹⁰⁷⁴ but no such group was set up.

51. One of the three residents was convicted in 1992 and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. The judge commented that "if the home had been run better by social services the offence could not have been committed".¹⁰⁷⁵

52. An internal enquiry was ordered by David White. Its report concluded, in 1993, that it was not possible to determine whether senior staff had been aware of the harmful sexual behaviour incidents at the time due to a lack of records.¹⁰⁷⁶ However, it concluded that insufficient control had been exerted by staff, so that "powerful boys" had created a culture of "intimidation and violence".¹⁰⁷⁷ The report also identified failures by staff to take action to prevent the abuse by responding to persistent and serious bullying of NO-A89 and to respond appropriately afterwards. Its recommendations did not address harmful sexual behaviour in community homes but did recommend training on the support needs of children who had suffered abuse and their vulnerability to abuse from other children. This was implemented.¹⁰⁷⁸

Farmlands Community Home (1995)

53. In March 1995, a fifth enquiry was carried out, following a complaint that a resident at Farmlands Community Home, D46, was at risk. It concluded that *"particularly difficult children some with problems of sexually abusive behaviour have tended to end up in Farmlands"*¹⁰⁷⁹ and there were a number of complaints of sexual abuse between residents. The report identified a failure to move D46 and one of the children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour, despite this being recommended by case conferences and the police. It concluded that the County failed to protect D46 by exposing him to both physical and sexual abuse. There was:

*"no strategy dealing with the sexualized behaviour of adolescent boys. No consistent therapeutic approach and there are limitations to the service that is provided at the moment ... The Child Protection Policy within residential care is both inadequate and unclear. Therefore it is recommended that a clear procedure be laid down and staff be made aware of these."*¹⁰⁸⁰

This was compounded by there being "no overall strategy across the County".¹⁰⁸¹

54. The Service Standards Unit annual report for Farmlands that year commented:

*"resident/resident abuse has occurred and the inspecting officers were very concerned about child protection issues in their widest sense. These concerns have been the subject of a confidential document sent to the Director of Social Services."*¹⁰⁸²

We have not seen this document nor any documents setting out the children's social care response to the report into D46.

Wider consideration of these investigations

55. While each investigation covered different institutions and raised its own issues, they were all commissioned by the County's children's social care service about children in their care in their establishments. However, children's social care do not appear to have considered these investigations together or their wider implications. There is no record of the Sandown Road report or the Farmlands report being considered by senior managers within children's social care or by the Social Services Committee. Knowledge and learning were not shared across the County; each report was considered, if at all, in isolation, with no reference to the findings or recommendations in the preceding reports.

56. There was also no apparent attempt to disseminate those findings or recommendations to staff in children's social care. For example, Margaret Stimpson (the County's Children's Service Manager in the early 1990s, responsible for a number of other residential homes) was unaware of the risk to children in care of harmful sexual behaviour and was never briefed about events at Amberdale, Greencroft, Hazelwood and Sandown Road or the reports.¹⁰⁸³

Other cases of harmful sexual behaviour in residential care

57. Between 2001 and 2005, there was a series of disclosures of harmful sexual behaviour in children's homes that were by that time the responsibility of the City:

57.1. In 2001, NO-A483, a resident at Beckhampton Road¹⁰⁸⁴ disclosed to staff that he had been raped by his roommate, who was then arrested and remanded to secure accommodation.¹⁰⁸⁵

57.2. In 2002, L43 alleged that another resident at Beechwood had indecently assaulted him.¹⁰⁸⁶ L43 told staff but felt like he was "talking to a brick wall", and was discouraged from pursuing the matter with the police.¹⁰⁸⁷ He told us that sexual activity between children at Beechwood happened "pretty much daily" and staff did nothing about it.¹⁰⁸⁸ L43 was seen as a "management problem" for staff.¹⁰⁸⁹

57.3. The same year, the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) concluded that Beechwood was "an environment where vulnerable young women, and men, were liable to be sexually exploited by each other".¹⁰⁹⁰ Michelle Foster (a staff member) told us that there was no guidance or training on harmful sexual behaviour.¹⁰⁹¹ Understaffing meant they could only manage and monitor sexual activity.¹⁰⁹²

57.4. In late 2003, NO-A479, a Beechwood resident, disclosed that she had twice been pressured into having sex with a male resident and thought she might be pregnant. The male resident should have been supervised closely by staff, having committed sexual offences against young children, but this had not been possible because of staff shortages. The NCSC were notified¹⁰⁹³ and visited Beechwood.¹⁰⁹⁴ The Assessment and Early Intervention Panel assessed the ongoing risk posed by the male resident as “very high” and supported a prosecution “should there be sufficient evidence”.¹⁰⁹⁵

57.5. In October 2003, NO-A480, a resident of Beechdale Road, disclosed he had been forced to perform oral sex and masturbation by two other residents. There was a joint investigation.¹⁰⁹⁶ One of the children allegedly exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour was removed, but the other remained in the home despite a recommendation to reconsider this by the Assessment and Early Intervention Panel. No charges were brought against the two residents¹⁰⁹⁷ and the one who remained at Beechdale Road was subsequently involved in another “very similar incident” with a different victim, which also did not proceed to charge.¹⁰⁹⁸

57.6. In 2004, strategy meetings were held amid concern about sexualised behaviour of 10 children in City children’s homes, including allegations of rape.¹⁰⁹⁹ The meetings were “to try and establish whether the incidents constituted child-on-child sexual abuse, and if so who were the victims and who were the perpetrators”.¹¹⁰⁰ Two of the children had been charged with sexual offences against children, but there had previously been separate strategy meetings for the individual children, so only “assorted information” had come to light. It was concluded that intensive sex education was needed for all children, and that all of the City’s children’s homes needed to liaise with each other regarding the children’s activities.

However, it does not appear that any steps were taken to address these cases at a senior management or political level.

58. Staff lacked sufficient guidance or training on harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁰¹ Glynis Storer, the City’s Practice Manager for Young People who Sexually Harm in the 2000s, said she never trained residential staff on harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁰²

Harmful sexual behaviour in foster care

59. Few studies have been conducted on harmful sexual behaviour in foster care.¹¹⁰³ Research shows a lack of information provided to foster carers about allegations of harmful sexual behaviour made against children placed with them, and the risks associated with their behaviour. This has impeded foster carers’ ability to identify or respond to harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁰⁴

60. We received evidence of four cases of alleged harmful sexual behaviour in foster care between 2002 and 2007: one in the City and three in the County. These involved multiple rapes, sexual assault and forced oral sex. There was a significant difference in age between the children allegedly exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour and the complainants in most of the allegations. We have seen no documentary evidence relating to the response to any earlier instances of harmful sexual behaviour in foster care, but the absence of records does not mean that earlier abuse did not occur.

61. In each of the four cases, the police were notified. In three of them, steps were taken to reduce the risk of further abuse, either by ensuring no unsupervised contact¹¹⁰⁵ or by moving the child allegedly exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁰⁶

62. However, in one case an alternative placement could not be found for a child allegedly exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour so he remained in the same placement as the complainants.¹¹⁰⁷ In another, the police did not pursue allegations of harmful sexual behaviour in one foster home until the same complainant made allegations relating to another child two years later. By this time the complainant did not want to pursue her original complaint.¹¹⁰⁸ In that case, the City also failed to properly assess the risks posed or support needed by the child allegedly exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour, despite procedures at the time requiring them to do so.¹¹⁰⁹

Recent years and ongoing issues

63. Since 2010, a number of cases have raised issues about the way in which the Councils respond to allegations of harmful sexual behaviour. In the City, a serious case review in 2011 highlighted the need for clear governance in addressing incidents. The review also called into question the effectiveness of its Assessment and Early Intervention Panel. In the County, the variable responses to allegations showed a continuing lack of understanding amongst residential care staff of the complexities in individual cases, and the challenge in knowing what to do in practice, despite the guidance and procedures in place.

64. The 2011 serious case review followed the suicide of a child in the care of the City¹¹¹⁰ who had suffered sexual assaults by other residents and had displayed harmful sexual behaviour himself. It described children who sexually offend as “one of the most vulnerable groups of children”, who needed “robust processes” to assess their “levels of need, vulnerability, risks posed and appropriate interventions”.¹¹¹¹ It recommended that the process of assessment should be reviewed and strengthened:

*“to ensure that these children have a full assessment and intervention plan that supports their own vulnerability and safeguarding needs. This will include the development of clear governance and performance management arrangements”.*¹¹¹²

In spite of these recommendations, in the 2013 annual review of the Assessment and Early Intervention Panel, it was noted that meetings of the group responsible for overseeing the work of the City’s AEIP had “not taken place for some time”.¹¹¹³

65. In 2012, the County failed in its response after a four-year-old in foster care with the County, NO-A605, was forced to perform oral sex on a 13-year-old child in care who was visiting the foster home.¹¹¹⁴ The AIM assessment was delayed due to a lack of trained social workers. The chair of the series of strategy meetings said that the County's response "could be seen as negligence".¹¹¹⁵ When an assessment finally did take place,¹¹¹⁶ it identified that the 13-year-old had been involved in an earlier incident of harmful sexual behaviour with another child which was not investigated. It was agreed that children's social care should complete a learning review into the case, but there is no evidence of what, if any, lessons were actually taken forward.¹¹¹⁷

66. There were also failings by the County in 2014, when a resident in a County children's home, NO-A588, was subjected to forced oral sex and masturbation by another resident.¹¹¹⁸ This led to an internal investigation, carried out by an independent investigator under the County's complaints procedure following a complaint made on behalf of NO-A588,¹¹¹⁹ which found that "staff at the care home failed in their duty of care".¹¹²⁰ There had been no assessment prior to placement of whether the victim would be safe at the home, and staff had not been informed about the known risks posed by the child exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour. Following the abuse, risk assessments were carried out, the complainant was moved to ensure his safety and the child exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour was closely supervised before moving to a therapeutic placement.¹¹²¹ However, the investigation found that it was unclear "how well the incident ... was investigated and how seriously it was taken in respect of lessons that could be learned from what happened".¹¹²² Although it was recommended that the County acknowledge their failings and consider an apology and appropriate redress to NO-A588, it was not until 18 months later that the County made an "unreserved apology" for the failings which resulted in him being abused.¹¹²³

67. In November 2016 and May 2017, allegations of harmful sexual behaviour were made at a children's home run by a private company, Homes2Inspire.¹¹²⁴ Homes2Inspire had its own safeguarding policy specific to harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹²⁵ This required any concerning behaviour to be referred to social workers and other relevant agencies.¹¹²⁶ Staff were only to conduct an internal investigation if the local authority gave permission and the allegation either did not meet the threshold for police involvement or the police had concluded their enquiries.¹¹²⁷ In practice, whilst the Deputy Manager at the home was clear that staff would not question children, he was confused as to the distinction between an investigation and how this differed from initial fact finding.¹¹²⁸

68. NO-A136 alleged, in October 2016, that she had been sexually abused in her previous foster placement by the foster carers' son.¹¹²⁹ At the time, she was 11 years old and the alleged perpetrator 21. Nonetheless, the Deputy Manager noted that NO-A136 "hasn't stated if this was consented or not"¹¹³⁰ despite the fact that consent would have been irrelevant.¹¹³¹

69. Allegations of sexual abuse made against NO-A136 by a male resident in November 2016¹¹³² and by NO-A136 against another male resident in May 2017 were handled appropriately. In the former case, the police decided it was not in the public interest to proceed;¹¹³³ in the latter, they concluded NO-A136's complaint was "a hoax". In any event, proactive steps were taken to protect the children and a detailed safety plan was put in place. This included increased supervision, extra staff, sex education, a sexualised behaviour tracking log, preventing children from going into each other's rooms and trying to ensure a family atmosphere in the home.¹¹³⁴ Staff also received specific training on harmful sexual behaviour and sexualised behaviours as a result of the second incident.¹¹³⁵

E.6: Nottinghamshire Police and Crown Prosecution Service approach to non-recent harmful sexual behaviour

Nottinghamshire Police

70. Although Nottinghamshire Police had a specialist team dealing with cases of child sexual abuse from 1988 onwards,¹¹³⁶ allegations of harmful sexual behaviour were excluded from its remit and were instead dealt with by its Criminal Investigation Department (CID).¹¹³⁷ This was because harmful sexual behaviour does not involve a perpetrator with care of or control over the victim.¹¹³⁸

71. From 2006,¹¹³⁹ certain cases of harmful sexual behaviour were dealt with by the CAIU and others by the CID, depending on the severity of the alleged offence. In any event, all harmful sexual behaviour cases should have been discussed with the CAIU, given its role in advising and monitoring the conclusions of harmful sexual behaviour investigations to ensure a consistent and appropriate response.¹¹⁴⁰ Since 2011, all allegations of harmful sexual behaviour should be referred to the CAIU.¹¹⁴¹

72. We have not seen any guidance or policy specific to the investigation of allegations of harmful sexual behaviour by Nottinghamshire Police.¹¹⁴² We were told that "generally these cases are dealt with in a way that is similar to other cases of abuse".¹¹⁴³ Child Abuse Investigation procedures simply state that where the suspect is a child, "this will not prevent a crime from being investigated".¹¹⁴⁴

The Crown Prosecution Service

73. Since 2009, all harmful sexual behaviour allegations must be referred to the Crown Prosecution Service for it to authorise charges.¹¹⁴⁵

74. The Crown Prosecution Service's approach has changed over time as it has become more aware of issues in relation to the vulnerability of both victims and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour, consent, adolescent relationships and public interest criteria. From 1986, when deciding whether to institute proceedings the Crown Prosecution Service was required to take into account the relative ages of the complainant and alleged perpetrator, and whether there was any element of "seduction or corruption".¹¹⁴⁶ Specific guidance relating to the prosecution of harmful sexual behaviour cases was first included in the 2009 guidelines on prosecuting cases of child abuse, which required all such cases to be reviewed by a youth prosecutor.¹¹⁴⁷

75. More recently, Youth Offenders Guidance¹¹⁴⁸ set out some of the unique considerations for prosecutors dealing with harmful sexual behaviour cases, which primarily affect the public interest test. It is emphasised that the overriding public concern is to protect children, rather than punish them unnecessarily.¹¹⁴⁹ Factors to consider include: the relevant ages and the sexual and emotional maturity of the parties, the views of other agencies involved, the likely impact of any prosecution on the parties, and whether there is any element of exploitation, coercion, threat, deception, grooming, seduction, manipulation or breach of trust in the relationship. A distinction is drawn in relation to children under the age of 13:

*"There is a fine line between sexual experimentation and offending and in general, children under the age of 13 should not be criminalised for sexual behaviour in the absence of coercion, exploitation or abuse of trust."*¹¹⁵⁰

Allegations of non-recent harmful sexual behaviour

76. More than 50 complainants who were in the care of the Councils allege non-recent harmful sexual behaviour, but few have reported their allegations to the police. For those who did report to the police, some allegations have led to a decision by the police or Crown Prosecution Service to take no further action,¹¹⁵¹ whilst investigations into others were still ongoing as at October 2018.¹¹⁵² We are aware of only one prosecution for non-recent harmful sexual behaviour, which took place in the early 1990s and related to harmful sexual behaviour at Hazelwood in 1985.

77. L43 contacted the police recently regarding harmful sexual behaviour in 2002. He was told that there was nothing that the police could do because he did not press charges at the time.¹¹⁵³ Chief Superintendent Robert Griffin confirmed that a complainant's earlier decision not to proceed with allegations would not be a bar to the police now taking his complaint forward, and that on the face of it there should have been an investigation into

¹¹⁵¹ For example, P4, L46, A76, D38 and L22 (INQ002574). In the case of NO-A94, the police decided not to speak to the alleged perpetrator (who had been a child at the time of the alleged abuse, but was an adult at the time of the allegation) on the basis that there was no corroborative evidence and she had been a victim of sexual abuse (NTP001632_1-4).

¹¹⁵² NSC000345; NTP001636_6-10; P.16 26 October 2018 3-6; NTP001632_11-14, 21-24.

L43's allegations.¹¹⁵⁴ Despite the police not pursuing an investigation in this case, Chief Superintendent Griffin had not sensed any reluctance in general to investigate non-recent allegations of harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁵⁵

78. At present, allegations of non-recent harmful sexual behaviour in care (made by adults no longer in care) are generally investigated by the adult team within Nottinghamshire Police's Public Protection Unit. If a complainant alleges non-recent abuse in care by staff and also alleges they were abused by a child, it will be investigated by Operation Equinox.¹¹⁵⁶

79. Neither the police nor the Crown Prosecution Service appear to have specific guidance on the prosecution of cases of non-recent harmful sexual behaviour. This means that there is no specific guidance on some of the difficult issues in these cases, such as the extent to which someone should be held responsible for offences carried out many years ago whilst he or she was a child in care, the impact of a child exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour having been abused themselves, and how the question of consent should be approached. Instead, these matters are left to individual police officers and prosecutors to consider.

80. The understanding of and response to harmful sexual behaviour between children has developed significantly over the past three decades. There had been a focus on the issue in the County in the late 1980s and early 1990s, with five enquiries into harmful sexual behaviour in children's homes, the formation of an Adolescent Sex Offenders Group, and the development of policies and procedures. Whilst the enquiries established that harmful sexual behaviour was widespread in its children's homes, the County did not address the prevalence of harmful sexual behaviour or take sufficient action to prevent and respond to incidents. More recently, however, the County has taken steps to evaluate and improve its response to harmful sexual behaviour, to better understand its scale, and to develop new approaches to its prevention.

F.1: Barriers to disclosure

1. One key issue relevant to the three case studies in this investigation, and beyond, is why so many people do not report abuse. Research indicates that up to two-thirds of children do not disclose abuse during childhood,¹¹⁵⁷ and only around 25 percent of those who are abused disclose when they reach adulthood.¹¹⁵⁸ For those who do disclose, it takes them on average around 24 years to do so from the time of the abuse.¹¹⁵⁹ Older children who do disclose will most frequently do so to their peers.¹¹⁶⁰

Barriers for children

2. Complainant core participants, other complainants who have given interviews to the police and some of the institutional witnesses who gave evidence to us identified the barriers to disclosure they had seen or experienced. These fall into a number of broad categories:¹¹⁶¹

- 2.1. Fear of not being believed, or of being told by the perpetrator that they would not be believed.
- 2.2. Being scared, threatened with violence by the perpetrator or told by them not to tell anyone.
- 2.3. Having no one to whom they felt able to disclose, which may be due to a lack of trust, a feeling of isolation, a lack of opportunity to speak to a social worker on their own, or not having the same social worker for a sustained period.
- 2.4. Feeling embarrassed, ashamed or guilty, including because of grooming.
- 2.5. Not understanding what was happening at the time or seeing the abuse as normal, possibly due to grooming or past abuse.
- 2.6. Thinking that disclosure was not worthwhile, including due to a negative response to previous disclosure or because staff were involved or implicated in some way in the abuse.
- 2.7. Fear of being separated from family.
- 2.8. Inhibition by shock, trauma or mental health problems caused by the abuse.

2.9. Fear that disclosure would affect their next placement.

3. Other barriers identified by professionals¹¹⁶² included children having other priorities,¹¹⁶³ feeling that they have found some stability or having an affection for the perpetrator or their family member,¹¹⁶⁴ and fearing that they will lose control of the process once they disclose.¹¹⁶⁵ There may also be practical issues such as disability or language and cultural differences.¹¹⁶⁶ Having suffered neglect or abuse in the past, leading to attachment difficulties, may also inhibit disclosure.¹¹⁶⁷

4. A large number of complainants of sexual abuse in care have come forward as adults to this investigation or to Nottinghamshire Police but, for others, barriers to disclosure remain. These barriers may be continuations of those listed above, such as a fear of not being believed,¹¹⁶⁸ a feeling of shame or guilt,¹¹⁶⁹ a lack of trust in authority¹¹⁷⁰ or fear of the perpetrator.¹¹⁷¹ Adult survivors may also be frightened that disclosure might have a negative impact on their relationships or that their own child might be removed by social services.¹¹⁷² They may also think that the support available will not be good enough¹¹⁷³ or they may have lost faith in the strength of their claim after, for example, being unable to access their records.¹¹⁷⁴

5. There is little evidence available on specific barriers to disclosure of harmful sexual behaviour.¹¹⁷⁵ Professor Hackett's view was that children were probably less likely to disclose harmful sexual behaviour than adult-perpetrated sexual abuse, in part because public education campaigns have largely focused on risk from adult perpetrators.¹¹⁷⁶

6. Even if a child makes an initial disclosure of abuse, the barriers to reporting discussed above may lead them subsequently to retract their disclosure.¹¹⁷⁷ Professionals need to deal with retractions cautiously and consider the possible reasons behind them.¹¹⁷⁸

Impact of relationship with perpetrator or type of placement

7. The type of placement, and the relationship between the complainant and the perpetrator, can have an impact on the barriers that arise in any individual case.¹¹⁷⁹ As a result, barriers to disclosure for children abused in care may require different considerations from those for children abused in the family home or in a religious or school setting.

8. Evidence suggests that children in care can be more vulnerable to abuse than other children, which may be due to their experiences prior to coming into care. For example, the impact of neglect may make it more difficult for children in care to distinguish between appropriate behaviour from trusted people and harmful relationships or activities.¹¹⁸⁰

Particular barriers for children in care include:

8.1. Children may be less likely to know what abuse is, if carers feel that it is an inappropriate topic to discuss.¹¹⁸¹

8.2. Those who may be best placed to provide an avenue for reporting, such as social workers, are often the same people who have removed them from their family (or other source of harm), which may make it difficult to establish trust.¹¹⁸²

8.3. Children who do disclose often do so to a relative (most likely mothers¹¹⁸³) or a friend. Those in care are away from their families and may well not be in settled placements or schools. As a result, the opportunity for, and likelihood of, disclosure is reduced.¹¹⁸⁴

8.4. Children may fear that if they do disclose their placement will break down, necessitating another new placement, or that they will be separated from their peers or siblings.¹¹⁸⁵

9. Some particular factors relevant to residential care may include:

9.1. The institutional environment has an inherent power imbalance, increasing the vulnerability of the child and making it more difficult for them to speak out.¹¹⁸⁶

9.2. There may be a sexualised culture within the home, including amongst staff, leading to a lack of appropriate boundaries and an unsafe environment in which children would find it difficult to talk about sexual abuse.¹¹⁸⁷

9.3. Physical abuse, including by staff, may inhibit disclosure by children through fear of retributive violence.¹¹⁸⁸

10. Specific factors affecting those in foster care may include:

10.1. Vulnerable children who experience apparent kindness and attention from a foster carer, which they may not have previously had at home, may then have conflicted feelings about disclosing abuse by the foster carer.¹¹⁸⁹

10.2. Some foster carers become trusted by social workers and other professionals, perhaps because of the length of time they have been foster carers or the number of children they have fostered.¹¹⁹⁰ Their reputation can then make children in their care feel less likely to be believed if it is their word against the foster carer's.

10.3. Long-term foster care will often involve care of a child over many years beginning from a young age. The depth of the ensuing relationship may act as a barrier – research suggests that the type of abuse least likely to be disclosed is long-term abuse by a carer or trusted adult which starts at a very young age.¹¹⁹¹

Reducing barriers to disclosure

11. A number of steps towards reducing barriers to disclosure are set out in the Councils' Inter-Agency Safeguarding Procedures, including:

- ensuring that children feel valued and respected, and listening and responding to their concerns;
- training staff and foster carers to be alert to children's vulnerabilities;
- giving children ready access to a trusted adult outside their placement and making them aware of independent visiting and advocacy services;
- having clear, effective and accessible complaints procedures for children;
- having clear procedures for staff to raise concerns about other staff or carers, such as a whistleblowing policy; and
- ensuring that if a child goes missing, guidance is followed and steps are taken to understand the reasons.¹¹⁹²

12. In terms of the response to children, as far back as 1984, multi-agency procedures in the County stated:

*"Almost all allegations by children of sexual abuse are true and it is important to communicate to the child at the outset that they are believed ... The victim needs to hear that full responsibility for the offences rests with the offender."*¹¹⁹³

13. There are other steps which already form part of recognised good childcare practice¹¹⁹⁴ and which may also reduce barriers to disclosure:

13.1. Children having the same social worker whom they are able to see alone on a regular basis and with whom they can establish a relationship.¹¹⁹⁵

13.2. Placements being regularly reviewed during unannounced visits.¹¹⁹⁶

13.3. Ensuring social workers, residential care staff and foster carers are able to “think the unthinkable”.¹¹⁹⁷

13.4. Providing support and counselling services to children from their first disclosure of an allegation.¹¹⁹⁸

13.5. Providing children with age-appropriate information which sets out that some behaviour, whether from adults or peers, is unacceptable and may constitute sexual abuse, and educating them about what they should do if a friend tells them they are being abused.¹¹⁹⁹

13.6. Ensuring that residential staff, foster carers, social workers, children’s social care managers and police officers are aware of the barriers to disclosure and of the need to take proactive steps to elicit disclosures.

*“Professionals need to be alert to a child’s attempts to begin to disclose. The information children share may be piecemeal and not necessarily evidential. What children say must also be viewed in the context of their behaviours and professional concerns in order to formulate a clear assessment of risk and plan of protective action.”*¹²⁰⁰

14. Following recognised practice will assist the Councils to reduce the barriers to disclosure for children in the future.

F.2: Recent responses to complainants

15. Once complainants come forward and do disclose sexual abuse, they have then to engage with various institutions, including the police, the Councils and the Crown Prosecution Service. In this they face numerous challenges, such as interviews and investigations, giving evidence in criminal trials, obtaining their social service records, commencing legal claims for compensation, establishing contact with the Councils, and accessing support and therapy.

16. Complainants have expressed concern about the level and quality of support received during Council or police investigations, or during any criminal trial that arises, and after an investigation has concluded. Some complainants become so critical of the support that they no longer want to engage with these mechanisms,¹²⁰¹ while others say they received no support and had to find it for themselves.¹²⁰²

Responses from the Councils

17. In early 2015, the County formed a Historical Abuse Team of social workers to work with adults making allegations of non-recent abuse. This team is responsible for the County’s children’s social care service’s enquiries into allegations¹²⁰³ and for supporting any police investigation. The team also works with the Support for Survivors Group¹²⁰⁴ and supports complainants, providing referrals to specialist services and producing chronologies of complainants' time in care based on the records.¹²⁰⁵ Although this constitutes a dedicated resource providing personalised support to complainants, it was developed “a little late”.¹²⁰⁶ Funding has now been secured until at least March 2020.¹²⁰⁷

18. The City has one social worker supporting police investigations, and allows the police full access to child care records. Alison Michalska (the City's Corporate Director for Children and Adults) was of the view that adults making complaints of non-recent abuse needed advice and support from adult social workers and adult specialists; she did not think that children's social workers were the right people to be involved. The City also has a single point of access for all complainants: this then signposts them to the City's support services as well as health and other services.¹²⁰⁸

19. The Councils also have various partnerships¹²⁰⁹ which offer opportunities for survivors to share experiences, such as a therapeutic recovery service for children who have been sexually abused or exploited which has information on external support services.¹²¹⁰ The City's Lead Member for Children's Services until May 2019, Councillor David Mellen, said that counselling and support “will always be a priority ... to make sure that people who have been let down are not let down again”.¹²¹¹ However, the City's view was that some counselling is better provided through the health service.¹²¹²

Responses from Nottinghamshire Police

Support

20. From the early stages of Operation Daybreak until at least 2013, if the police came into contact with a complainant who they felt needed support, they would direct them to their GP.¹²¹³ DI Yvonne Dales (former Senior Investigating Officer of Operation Daybreak) accepted that this may not have been the “best approach”, and reflected that provision of support for victims as well as directing them to appropriate support were not prioritised early enough in the investigation. There was no specific training on providing support to complainants.¹²¹⁴ Since 2014, Paddy Tipping, the Police and Crime Commissioner, has been responsible for commissioning support services to which the police will direct complainants.¹²¹⁵

Contact

21. Several complainants were dissatisfied with their contact with the police during Operations Daybreak, Xeres and Equinox.¹²¹⁶ This included the initial method of contact,¹²¹⁷ the frequency of contact¹²¹⁸ and communication during investigations,¹²¹⁹ whilst some disliked the way in which they were told that no further action would be taken.¹²²⁰ However, Mandy Coupland, co-founder of the Child Sexual Abuse Survivors Group, was positive about current Chief Superintendent Robert Griffin's approach; he didn't "butter things up" and his way of communicating with complainants was "helpful".¹²²¹

22. Since 2005, complainants should be updated regularly by the police until an investigation is closed.¹²²² During Operation Daybreak, there was no protocol on approaching potential victims. DI Dales introduced logs to record contact with complainants.¹²²³ DC Julie Balodis's view was that the individual officer would give the initial contact "careful consideration", based on the information available, although she acknowledged that "we don't always get it right".¹²²⁴

23. The police are responsible for informing complainants of a decision not to prosecute and of the reasons why this decision was made,¹²²⁵ which DI Dales told us would "ideally" be done in person.¹²²⁶ Evidence from complainants suggests that this did not happen in each case.¹²²⁷ Since 2013, victims have had a right to request a review of a Crown Prosecution Service decision not to prosecute or to terminate proceedings.¹²²⁸

24. In our Interim Report, we recommended that a joint inspection of compliance with the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime be commissioned.¹²²⁹ A cross-government Victims Strategy was subsequently published in September 2018, which "commits to hold agencies to account for compliance with the Victims' Code through improved reporting, monitoring and transparency on whether victims are receiving entitlements".¹²³⁰

The most recent version is the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime (October 2015) which is not clear on the regularity of contact required but notes that this should be agreed at the outset in the case of child complainants (p73). For adult complainants, they should be told at the outset how often they will receive updates from the police, following a discussion about it (p19). The Code of Practice is due to be updated again; the Government's 2018 Victims Strategy states it will "Provide timely and clear information to victims. We will give victims more choice in how they are communicated with, whether they want to speak to another person or communicate by email or text message. We will make sure that information is accurate and timely and we will clarify the role and responsibility of criminal justice agencies in the updated Victims' Code."

Other support

25. There are several independent survivor support groups in Nottinghamshire. The Support for Survivors Group provides a forum for survivors and their representatives to meet with local safeguarding boards, the Councils, clinical commissioning groups, Nottinghamshire Healthcare NHS, the Police and Crime Commissioner and the police.¹²³¹ The CSA Survivors Group in Nottingham seeks “justice for survivors” and directs people to the correct services.¹²³²

26. Whilst these groups are clearly of benefit to complainants, waiting lists for counselling and other treatment (particularly in crisis teams) are still too long, insufficient empathy is still sometimes shown by the authorities towards complainants¹²³³ and, in the view of one survivors group, some police officers remain untrained to deal with complainants.¹²³⁴

Apologies

27. In the 1990s, children who had been sexually abused received apologies from the County in a small number of cases following convictions, critical findings in inquiry reports or civil claims which had been settled.¹²³⁵ More generally, however, the County was cautious about apologies, which were considered “dangerous” as they could amount “to an admission of legal liability which can open up the department to legal claims”.¹²³⁶ Given the number of cases in the late 1980s and 1990s in which staff were convicted of or the subject of disciplinary sanction for sexual abuse of children, the County should have apologised and learned lessons.

28. More recently, the Councils have been willing to apologise in some individual cases where there has been a conviction, or where they are satisfied that there was abuse. For example, the County apologised to NO-A588 in 2017¹²³⁷ and the City apologised to the children in the NO-F35 case, despite his acquittal.¹²³⁸

29. The County has apologised to those who suffered abuse while in its care. In March 2016, the Leader of the County Council made an unreserved apology to the victims and survivors of Andris Logins; while the apology acknowledged the County’s failure to protect vulnerable children, it only came after Logins’ conviction.¹²³⁹ In January 2018, the County apologised to all those who had suffered abuse while in its care and made a pledge about how it would act in the future.¹²⁴⁰ The County’s public apology has been received positively by many victims and survivors.¹²⁴¹ However, as acknowledged by Colin Pettigrew,¹²⁴² the County does not always meet the terms of its pledge, in its approach to civil claims.

30. In the City, as recently as February 2018, Councillor Mellen reported the Leader of the City as saying “we will apologise when there is something to apologise for”.¹²⁴³ It was suggested that this did not represent the attitude of the City at the time,¹²⁴⁴ but Councillor Mellen signed off the minutes of the relevant meeting. Councillor Mellen accepted that this was offensive to those who were abused while in the City's care. Alison Michalska explained that the thinking was that an apology would be made when there was a conviction of an employee, ex-employee or foster carer from the City.¹²⁴⁵ The City did make a public apology two weeks before our October 2018 hearings.¹²⁴⁶ However, this apology was viewed with cynicism by some complainants and was rejected.¹²⁴⁷

31. In June 2018, following an interview by the Nottingham Post,¹²⁴⁸ Alison Michalska was quoted as saying that no evidence had appeared of disclosure not being acted on and thought they had "learnt the lessons" from cases up to and including the 1980s. Ms Michalska disputes the accuracy of the article, but the Nottingham Post has maintained its position.¹²⁴⁹ The City should have apologised for the sexual abuse of children in its care a long time ago.

Civil litigation

32. There have been approximately 200 civil litigation claims against the County. Of these, 41 were ongoing as at July 2018 and only one had gone to trial.¹²⁵⁰ As at May 2018, the City had received 37 claims since 2009, of which 18 had been settled.¹²⁵¹ The handling of these claims has caused further difficulties for complainants.

33. In the early 1990s, there was some dispute within the County about the extent to which staff should co-operate with claimant solicitors. There were concerns that the County's duties to children "were in danger of being overridden by those seeking to defend the County Council from costs ... There had been no overall liaison or drawing lessons to be learnt."¹²⁵² In response, in 1993, the County formed a Risk Management Group (made up of representatives of social services, the County solicitor and the Risk & Insurance Officer¹²⁵³) to respond to claims received.¹²⁵⁴ As learning points arose, the group met with children's social care managers to discuss those lessons, and subsequently disseminated them more widely by holding a seminar.¹²⁵⁵

34. However, there remained a wariness about apologising, because of financial consequences, and staff were not authorised to admit liability.¹²⁵⁶ L24 said that an "apology would mean more to me than any amount of money" and that recognition and acceptance from the Councils would have been the "only thing that would really help".¹²⁵⁷

¹²⁵⁷ L24 5 October 2018 130/2-10. We understand that the City has, since our hearings in October 2018, changed its policy towards apologies and that a letter of apology, along with a meeting with Ms Michalska if desired, is now sent to every claimant when their claim is resolved.

35. Some complainants were surprised that the Councils resisted their claims. L46 was “shocked” that the County would deny liability for sexual assault as the incident is recorded in her records.¹²⁵⁸ L17 told us that reliance on ‘limitation’ arguments (that claims could not proceed because they were out of time) made her “really angry”.¹²⁵⁹

36. The delay in settling claims also caused concern. L17’s case took six years to conclude; she described the process as “hell” and felt that “they were just hoping I would go away”.¹²⁶⁰ Delays can of course be caused by either side¹²⁶¹ and it is important not to settle too quickly, before the impact of the abuse on the complainant can be assessed.¹²⁶² However, we note that the Councils have made efforts to reduce delay for complainants, with the County reducing the time to reach a settlement from an average of 12 years in 2005 to eight months in 2017.

37. Concerns were also raised about the level of settlement offers. L43 said that the offer made to him was “insulting”, describing it as “like offering me a £10 note and telling me to go home and shut up”.¹²⁶³ However, how litigation is conducted is typically decided by the Councils’ insurers.¹²⁶⁴

38. The Inquiry will consider the approach to civil litigation, apologies and other issues related to the justice system in greater detail in its Accountability and Reparations investigation,¹²⁶⁵ the report on which will be published later in 2019.

Care records

39. For those in care during their childhood, the records made by social workers and residential care staff are often their only available means of understanding their past. However, there are issues surrounding the quality of records, the extent of their retention and the access given to them for those formerly in care.

40. Under national legislation and regulations, residential care staff were required to keep records from 1951 onwards.¹²⁶⁶ These included registers of admission and discharge and records of each day the child was resident, as well as “events of importance connected with the home”. The most recent regulations in 2015 set out in extensive detail the information that must be provided in a child’s case records.¹²⁶⁷ Similarly, since 1955, local authorities have been required to maintain records on children in care in foster placements.¹²⁶⁸ Social workers are also required to keep and maintain detailed records on the children in their caseload, most recently under 2010 regulations.¹²⁶⁹

41. In Nottinghamshire, from 1978 onwards, County and multi-agency procedures and guidance set out the records to be kept by residential staff, foster carers and social workers in various circumstances, including when allegations of abuse were made.¹²⁷⁰ These were set out most recently in interagency procedures for both Councils¹²⁷¹ and in the Councils' individual procedures.¹²⁷²

Quality of care records

42. The majority of complainant core participants were in care from the 1970s to the 1990s, several of whom gave evidence of their concerns about the quality of the records kept about them during their time in care.¹²⁷³ Similar concerns were raised by children's social care management and councillors over the past four decades. For example:

42.1. We were told about poor record-keeping occurring as early as the mid-1970s, with residential staff at Beechwood failing to record events in logbooks and incident sheets.¹²⁷⁴

42.2. A 1979 memo from the County's Divisional Director to senior staff at Beechwood noted: *"the full account of that incident should have been recorded in the logbook ... will you please ensure that the logbooks in the Lindens and in Redcot are at all times kept fully and accurately and in particular, regard is had to the child's behaviour and the response of staff to that behaviour."*¹²⁷⁵

42.3. In 1987, County Councillor Tom Butcher wrote to the Director of Social Services expressing concern that "records are 'not kept within the department' in relation to children in care involved in sexual offences/acts. I consider it to be an important part of managerial monitoring of problems facing children in care".¹²⁷⁶ We have seen no response.

42.4. A County investigation into child sexual abuse in foster care and Wollaton House in 1992 reported that recording and organisation of residential and fostering files were poor, and that this had been happening over many years. Records were not properly organised, but also were not being kept in the first place. The authors emphasised that, *"staff should be clear that children cannot be protected if vital information is omitted, and that records are a part of the history of a child's life during any time they spend in a 'looked after' placement."*¹²⁷⁷

42.5. During the course of a disciplinary investigation in 1995, most of the records kept by Amberdale were found to be "shoddy, partial and contained little substance to aid professional social work decision making on the children concerned".¹²⁷⁸

43. From 1955 onwards, a local authority was required to retain the records of a child in foster care until their 21st birthday.¹²⁷⁹ Until 1991, the retention of child protection files or social services records for a child in residential care was at the discretion of the record keeper.¹²⁸⁰ Since then, records for each child in care have had to be retained until their 75th birthday.¹²⁸¹ This remains the current retention period¹²⁸² and has been applied by the City since 1998.¹²⁸³

44. In the County, keeping “historic records” was viewed historically by some children’s social care staff as “the lowest priority”.¹²⁸⁴ During an internal reorganisation in 1985, there was “an awful lot of weeding and destruction of files”, which led to the loss of certain information which could have been considered “essential to keep”.¹²⁸⁵

45. Similarly, most of the City’s documents relating to the provision of social services before 1974 have been destroyed. Only those which the City was required to keep have survived from this period, such as admissions registers, logbooks and medical records.¹²⁸⁶

Access to records

46. Access to care records is vital for individuals to understand their childhood experiences, the reasons for being taken into care and what happened to them during their time in care.¹²⁸⁷ For those who allege abuse during their time in care, being unable to see their records can compound the sense of being let down by the Councils.

47. Since 1998, the primary methods of obtaining records for those formerly or currently in care have been via a subject access request¹²⁸⁸ or disclosure in civil court proceedings.¹²⁸⁹

48. On at least some occasions, the Councils have not responded appropriately to requests for access to records, particularly given their legal obligations set out above. For some complainants, the search for records and the lack of communication and explanation have been difficult and upsetting.¹²⁹⁰ In particular:

48.1. D6 (a care leaver) submitted his first subject access request to the City in May 2015. After a long wait, he felt compelled to disclose to the City that he was a core participant in this investigation, and he only received his records days before the hearings in October 2018.¹²⁹¹ The City told us that D6’s first subject access request was received by the wrong part of the City, that he had not provided the necessary proof of identity and that the City had to wait for permission to release the records of D6's birth family at the same time as his own.¹²⁹² The procedural hurdles appear to take no account of the significance to the applicant of the records, nor do they allow for prioritisation. This was an unacceptable delay.

48.2. A79 described spending "30-odd years" trying to get his records, making numerous subject access requests and being told that his records no longer existed. In 2000, he eventually received eight pages of information typed up by an investigation officer from the County, but did not understand how they were produced.¹²⁹³

49. Further changes to the process have been made recently. Since 2015, the County's Historic Abuse Team have been assisting those formerly in care to access their records.¹²⁹⁴ Around the time of the investigation's October 2018 hearings, the City agreed to establish a new role "dealing wholly with the provision of social care records".¹²⁹⁵ Further improvements to processes are clearly required, as we identified in the Inquiry's Interim Report.¹²⁹⁶

F.3: External inspections of children's social care in the Councils

50. Although local authorities should not be relying solely on external inspections to understand if their services are performing adequately, they provide an insight into changing performance.

51. The County has received variable Ofsted assessments since 2008:

- 2008: Services for children in care and the quality of residential care were rated as 'good'.¹²⁹⁷
- 2010: Whilst services for children in care were 'adequate', safeguarding services were 'inadequate', with significant weaknesses in staffing and failures to protect children, resulting in an improvement notice for safeguarding.¹²⁹⁸
- 2011: The County's safeguarding service was rated 'adequate' and some aspects 'good'. As a result, the improvement notice was lifted.¹²⁹⁹
- 2015: Overall, the County was rated 'good', with positive comments about arrangements for the management of allegations against staff:
*"Individual cases are managed and planned well, with timely and effective work carried out to ensure risks to individual children are assessed and addressed, as well as investigation of the adults concerned."*¹³⁰⁰
- June 2018: Ofsted commented that the County's self-evaluation of its children's social care had highlighted strengths in practice as well as areas for improvement.¹³⁰¹

- February 2019: After a ‘focused visit’ assessing the County’s arrangements for children potentially at risk or in need of support, Ofsted’s report was generally positive¹³⁰² but it did not cover children in care.

Since 2011, the County’s children’s social care service appears to have shown significant improvement. It is now in ‘Pathway One’ under the new ILACS framework, so that it receives a short inspection about three years after the previous inspection.¹³⁰³ However, we note there has been no general Ofsted inspection of the County’s children’s social care service since 2015.¹³⁰⁴

52. The inspections of the City have been mixed:

- 2007: The City was rated as ‘adequate’ by Ofsted overall, with social care services improving (including in placement choice and residential homes, which now met national standards).¹³⁰⁵
- 2011: The City received a ‘good’ rating for safeguarding and services for looked after children. The dedicated police officer for looked after children was described as “an outstanding example of effective support”.¹³⁰⁶
- 2014: The City’s children’s social care service was rated as ‘requires improvement’ overall, including for services for children in need and children in care overall.¹³⁰⁷ There were too many changes of allocated social worker, inadequate supervision, poor planning and poor record keeping. However, there were positive findings in relation to the placement of children outside of the City, social worker visits to children in care and the response to allegations of abuse or mistreatment of children by professional staff and carers. Young people had access to an independent advocacy service and knew how to make complaints.
- 2017: Ofsted rated children’s social care services ‘good’ but the progress of children in care and care leavers ‘requires improvement’.¹³⁰⁸ The City did not always fully understand the reasons why children went missing and therefore did not always provide them with the necessary support; the City told us its practice in this regard was not yet good enough.¹³⁰⁹
- May 2018: Based on a self-evaluation, Ofsted observed that “the sense is of a strong authority continuing to manage well in a difficult environment”.¹³¹⁰
- November 2018: The City was rated as ‘requires improvement’ for all its children’s social care services.¹³¹¹ Its self-assessment did not “accurately identify all the shortfalls found during this inspection”. While there were areas of good practice (such as the management of allegations against staff and the identification of children at risk of child sexual exploitation), there were insufficient social workers, poor systems to support the education of children in care, delays in placing children appropriately and insufficient priority for securing adequate emergency accommodation.

Part G

Conclusions and recommendations

Conclusions and recommendations

G.1: Conclusions

1. Most institutions referred to in this report failed children who were sexually abused whilst in the care of Nottinghamshire County and Nottingham City Councils, to a greater or lesser extent. These included elected members, senior managers, frontline social work and residential staff and foster carers within both of the Councils, and Nottinghamshire Police.

Nature and extent of allegations of child sexual abuse

2. The sexual abuse of children in the care of the Nottinghamshire Councils was widespread in both residential and foster care during the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s. It included repeated rapes and other sexual assaults, as well as physical abuse. Allegations have been made against a range of perpetrators, including senior and junior residential care staff, foster carers, and children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour.

3. Around 350 complainants have made allegations of sexual abuse whilst in the care of the Councils from the 1960s onwards but the true number is likely to be considerably higher.

Conclusions in respect of the Councils

4. Neither of the Councils learned from their mistakes despite decades of evidence of failure to protect children in care. Successive reviews, both internal and external, identified weaknesses in policy and practice relating to the protection of children in residential care, in foster care and in the area of harmful sexual behaviour. Many of these reviews included recommendations for change which were accepted but rarely acted upon.

5. Over the last 30 years, the Councils have produced policies and procedures on responding to allegations of sexual abuse of children in care. However, these policies were not generally made known to staff nor was there a checking process in place to verify implementation.

6. The County acknowledged that there was a crisis in children's social care in the early 1990s when the root cause of this crisis was the failure to recruit sufficient numbers of qualified social workers. This was not unusual at that time, but the Inquiry heard nothing of any strategies put in place to address the problem. The focus was on child protection on the misplaced assumption that children in care were sufficiently protected by the carers themselves. In the same period, there was a "deep rift" between children's social care and Nottinghamshire Police.

7. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, a significant number of residential care staff in the County faced disciplinary investigations for the sexual abuse of children. This should have prompted an assessment, at a senior level, of the scale of abuse, why it was happening and how the risk of abuse could be addressed. Despite occasional attempts to consider the issues more broadly, the County failed to address the risk of abuse to children in their care.

8. When proper disciplinary action was taken by the County about alleged misconduct relating to sexual abuse, some council officers expressed extreme frustration that on occasion, councillors would overturn their decisions on appeal.

9. Only qualified social workers are required to be registered with the Health and Care Professions Council. Therefore, allegations of sexual abuse are only referred to an external regulator if the alleged perpetrator residential care staff member is also a qualified social worker. As set out in the Inquiry's Interim Report, residential child care staff should be registered with an independent professional regulatory body.

10. The various chief executives of the Councils may not have been informed by their Directors of Children's Services of the seriousness of the sexual abuse occurring on their watch. Nevertheless, as heads of paid service, the chief executives should have been alert to their statutory responsibilities for the welfare of children in their care and taken a proactive leadership role.

11. There have been positive efforts by the Councils, including:

11.1. The City's Historical Concerns Project reviewed the employment records of current and former employees to identify any concerns about the risks posed to children. This provided some reassurance that alleged perpetrators did not evade scrutiny.

11.2. The County's ongoing Historical Abuse Team provides support for complainants, follows up on allegations and works with survivors groups, while the City has a single point of access for all complainants which signposts support services. This kind of engagement with survivors groups can provide clear channels of communication which reduces the risk of misunderstanding and may improve relationships with victims and survivors.

12. Provision and consistency of support and counselling for those who have suffered sexual abuse in care remain an issue. More needs to be done by the Councils, and the police need to continue to be receptive to complainants' needs. Support services are now commissioned by the Police and Crime Commissioner and the NHS also has a duty to provide such support.

13. The Councils have taken different approaches to apologising for non-recent abuse and their past failure to protect children in their care. Whilst the County have made a public apology, the City have been guarded and slow to appreciate the level of distress felt by complainants. Their approach has caused understandable upset and anger, which could have been avoided.

14. Access to records for those formerly in care has not been well handled. For some, their search for records and the lack of communication or explanation from the Councils has been distressing. For others, the procedural hurdles seem to have taken little account of the importance of these records to the complainants, with no provision for fast-tracking the process.

Residential care

15. Residential care across England was characterised, from the late 1970s to the early 1990s, as poorly resourced and managed, with residential care staff who were predominantly unqualified and received little, if any, training.

16. This is reflected by the Beechwood case study, in which we saw untrained and unqualified staff, insufficient resources and, increasingly, older children exhibiting multiple behavioural problems. In these respects, Beechwood was not an exception. However, it demonstrates the extent to which these underlying issues create and maintain an environment in which vulnerable children are at risk of abuse.

17. A significant number of children were sexually abused whilst resident at Beechwood. For example, John Dent and NO-F29 were able to commit abuse in the knowledge that children would be too frightened to speak out, or would think that, if they did, they would not be believed. Similarly, Andris Logins was able to sexually abuse residents at Beechwood because it was an environment where sexualised behaviour was tolerated or overlooked. Some staff raised concerns about the behaviour of colleagues but were not taken seriously; others witnessed colleagues acting inappropriately towards children but did nothing.

18. Despite the high number of allegations of sexual abuse against staff at Beechwood, there are only two examples of disciplinary action taken in response, both of which were inadequate.

19. During the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s, the staff were often viewed as vulnerable rather than the children, with some girls seen as creating a particular risk for male staff. During this period, Beechwood was not a safe environment for vulnerable children. Staff were both threatening and violent, physical abuse was commonplace and children were frightened. The children placed at Beechwood were not protected and supported as they should have been.

20. The reasons for high levels of absconding in the mid-1980s to the 1990s were not explored by Beechwood staff, who saw absconding as an example of “devious” behaviour. The risks faced by these children and their vulnerabilities were not addressed.

21. Until the early 1990s, there was a lack of sustained attention given to residential care by staff and senior managers in the County’s children’s social care service. The most vulnerable children were left in the hands of staff who were not qualified to care for them. From 1992, the County recognised these challenges and took steps to address them.

22. When the City took over the running of Beechwood in 1998, the staff environment had not improved and children and young people were still at risk of sexual abuse. This was not helped by overcrowding. Between 1998 and its eventual closure in 2006, there were several opportunities for the City to close Beechwood and it should have done so earlier.

Foster care

23. For the last 40 years, foster care has been the most common placement for children in the care of the Councils. The County re-organised its fostering service in the mid-1970s. For some time afterwards, recruitment, assessment, support, supervision and deregistration of foster carers was inconsistent.

24. By the beginning of the 1990s, the County's response improved, but this was not followed through. There were long-standing tensions between social workers for foster carers and social workers for the individual children who were alleged to have been abused. This is not an unfamiliar problem but what was troubling was the extent to which the support for foster carers in such situations continued over many years without any independent assessment of individual allegations. So often, the prevailing assumption was that the foster carer must always be guiltless.

25. The Norman Campbell case, which involved the sexual abuse of children in residential and foster care between 1982 and 1990, was an example of poor practice by County fostering management. Campbell's approval did not follow the established process, legitimate concerns about his motivation were ignored and he was not subject to re-approval as he should have been. His abuse of children might have been prevented had processes been followed.

26. There continues to be weakness in current foster care practice in both Councils despite improvements. These include poor joint-agency working, inconsistent decision-making, and failure to refer cases to the fostering panel or to notify Ofsted or councillors. Examples of good practice in response to allegations include the use of independent risk assessments and child-centred approaches to de-registration.

27. Between 1988 and 1995, there were enquiries into harmful sexual behaviour in five County community homes. While a multi-agency group was set up leading to the development of policies and procedures on the issue, the work of the group was largely squandered. Issues raised in individual reports were not considered more broadly or together; similarly, lessons were not learnt and recommendations not pursued.

28. Recent cases of harmful sexual behaviour in residential and foster care show problems remain with the institutional responses. There is a lack of clear governance in the City. In the County, there are still not enough social workers trained to carry out assessments of children exhibiting harmful sexual behaviour. In some instances, full investigations have not been carried out, managers have not been notified, and children not safeguarded.

29. The County has taken positive steps to audit its practice and develop multi-agency responses to harmful sexual behaviour, although their most recent audit in 2018 showed that there is still some way to go. By contrast, we have not seen evidence of the City taking steps to evaluate its practice in recent years and they did not refer to the issue of harmful sexual behaviour in their oral or written closing submissions to the investigation, despite it being one of three selected case studies.

30. There is no clear process within the Councils for ensuring elected councillors are made aware, in confidence, of serious allegations of harmful sexual behaviour by children in care.

31. Despite increasing awareness and understanding of the issue of harmful sexual behaviour across the country, there is no national strategy or overarching framework for investigating, auditing, responding to, and preventing harmful sexual behaviour (including, but not limited to, children in care). The Inquiry is carrying out further research on this issue.

Barriers to disclosure

32. There were particular barriers to disclosure for children in both residential and foster care. With regard to residential care, these included the institutional setting, a sexualised and physically abusive staff culture, and abuse being perpetrated by staff in senior positions. Specific factors affecting those in foster care included the complex relationship that can develop between the child and the foster carer, and the fear of not being believed because the perpetrator foster carer was established and trusted by professionals.

Conclusions in respect of governance

33. Despite being regularly informed of disciplinary action taken against staff (but not foster carers) following investigations into sexual abuse of children in residential care during the late 1980s and 1990s, the County councillors responsible for oversight of children's social care did not question the scale of sexual abuse or what action was being taken. This was a serious failure of scrutiny and governance.

34. County councillors are now briefed on some allegations of sexual abuse of children in care. A recently introduced protocol requires that the Lead Member for Children's Services be briefed on all allegations of sexual abuse against members of staff, but only some allegations of sexual abuse against foster carers or other children. At the time of our hearings in October 2018, the City had no written protocol on when the Lead Member should be notified of allegations of sexual abuse of children in care.

35. Continuing to the present day, neither the County nor the City has had a process by which there has been regular reporting of the number of allegations and the response to those allegations. This has meant that knowledge of the scale of allegations of sexual abuse of children in care and the response to those allegations has been limited and inconsistent.

Conclusions in respect of Nottinghamshire Police and the Crown Prosecution Service

36. Nottinghamshire Police's investigation into allegations of non-recent sexual abuse of children in residential care (Operation Daybreak) was not adequately resourced or supported from its formation in 2011 until 2015. Given the increasing number of allegations of abuse and the criticisms from internal and external reviews, senior police officers should have done more to support the operation. The police did not treat the allegations with sufficient seriousness.

37. Since 2015, when Operation Daybreak was subsumed into Operation Equinox, there have been a number of prosecutions and there now appears to be greater confidence in the force's commitment amongst complainants.

38. However, Nottinghamshire Police has consistently shown a lack of urgency and failed to address the weaknesses identified and the recommendations made in recent inspections and reviews concerning its approach to investigating child sexual abuse. Responsibility for this rests primarily with the force itself. These failings had consequences for the children involved. The most recent assessment report indicates some improvements.

39. Complainant experience of engagement with the police and the Crown Prosecution Service has been mixed. The police have had to improve how they communicate with complainants following criticisms, including the means of initial contact with complainants, the irregularity of subsequent contact, and issues with the notification that an investigation has been closed.

G.2: Matters to be explored further by the Inquiry

40. The Inquiry will return to a number of issues which emerged during this investigation, including but not limited to:

40.1. Harmful sexual behaviour.

40.2. The barriers to disclosure of sexual abuse by children, including those in care, and proactive steps to reduce those barriers.

40.3. The approach to civil litigation, including the role of insurers.

G.3: Recommendations

The Chair and Panel make the following recommendations, which arise directly from this investigation and the case studies of Beechwood, foster care and harmful sexual behaviour in Nottinghamshire and are specific to the County and the City. Other local authorities should consider the issues identified in this report and take action as appropriate to their own circumstances.

Nottingham City Council and Nottinghamshire County Council should publish their response to these recommendations, including the timetable involved, within six months of the publication of this report.

Recommendation 1:

Nottingham City Council should assess the potential risks posed by current and former foster carers directly provided by the council in relation to the sexual abuse of children. They should also ensure that current and former foster carers provided by external agencies are assessed by those agencies. Any concerns which arise should be referred to the appropriate body or process, including the Disclosure and Barring Service, the local authority designated officer (LADO) or equivalent, the fostering panel and the police.

Nottinghamshire County Council should assess the potential risks posed by current and former residential care staff and foster carers, which are directly provided by the council, in relation to the sexual abuse of children. They should also ensure that current and former staff in residential care provided by external agencies, and current and former foster carers provided by external agencies, are assessed by those agencies. Any concerns which arise should be referred to the appropriate body or process, including the Disclosure and Barring Service, the relevant regulatory body, the local authority designated officer (LADO), the fostering panel and the police.

Recommendation 2:

Nottingham City Council and its child protection partners should commission an independent, external evaluation of their practice concerning harmful sexual behaviour, including responses, prevention, assessment, intervention and workforce development. An action plan should be set up to ensure that any recommendations are responded to in a timely manner and progress should be reported to City's Safeguarding Children Partnership.

Annex 1

Overview of process and evidence obtained by the Inquiry

1. Definition of scope for the case study.

This investigation is an inquiry into the nature and extent of, and the institutional responses to, allegations of sexual abuse of children in the care of the Nottinghamshire Councils.

The scope of the investigation is as follows:

- “1. The Inquiry will investigate the nature and extent of, and institutional responses to, the sexual abuse of children in the care of Nottingham City and Nottinghamshire County Councils ('the Councils'), including those cared for in children's homes and by foster carers and/or adoptive parents. The investigation will incorporate case-specific investigations and a review of information available from published and unpublished reports and reviews, court cases, and previous investigations.*
- 2. In doing so, the Inquiry will consider the experiences of victims and survivors of child sexual abuse while in the care of the Councils, and will investigate:*
 - 2.1. the nature and extent of allegations of child sexual abuse of children in the care of the Councils during the relevant period;*
 - 2.2. the nature and extent of the failures of the Councils to protect such children from sexual abuse;*
 - 2.3. the appropriateness of the response of the Councils, law enforcement agencies, prosecuting authorities and other public authorities to reports of child sexual abuse involving children cared for by the Councils, and/or reports of child sexual abuse by individuals who were employed by or contracted by the Councils, with access to children;*
 - 2.4. the extent to which the Councils sought to investigate, learn lessons, implement changes, and/or provide support to victims and survivors, in response to:*
 - a) allegations that individuals with access to children cared for by the Councils had sexually abused children;*
 - b) criminal investigations and prosecutions and/or civil litigation in relation to alleged sexual abuse of children within the care of the Councils;*
 - c) reports, reviews and inquiries into child sexual abuse and/or safeguarding; and/or*
 - d) other external guidance.*

- 2.5. the adequacy of the policies and practices adopted by the Councils during the relevant period in relation to safeguarding and child protection, including considerations of governance, training, recruitment, leadership, reporting and investigation of child sexual abuse, disciplinary procedures, information sharing with outside agencies, and approach to reparations;
 - 2.6. the extent to which children who made allegations of sexual abuse may have had special educational needs and/or any other form of special need or vulnerability and whether that may have made them more vulnerable to sexual abuse;
 - 2.7. the extent to which there was a culture within the Councils which inhibited the proper investigation, exposure, prevention of, and reparation for, child sexual abuse; and
 - 2.8. the adequacy of the inspection regimes applicable throughout the relevant period.
3. To investigate the issues set out in paragraph 2, the Inquiry may identify a number of case studies.
 4. *In light of the investigations set out above, the Inquiry will publish a report setting out its findings, lessons learned, and recommendations to improve child protection and safeguarding in England and Wales.*¹³¹²

7. Restriction orders

On 23 March 2018, the Chair issued an updated restriction order under section 19(2)(b) of the Inquiries Act 2005, granting general anonymity to all core participants who allege they are the victim and survivor of sexual offences (referred to as ‘complainant core participants’). The order prohibited:

- (i) the disclosure or publication of any information that identifies, names or gives the address of a complainant who is a core participant; and
- (ii) the disclosure or publication of any still or moving image of a complainant core participant.

This order meant that any complainant core participant within this investigation was granted anonymity, unless they did not wish to remain anonymous. That order was amended on 23 March 2018, but only to vary the circumstances in which a complainant core participant may themselves disclose their own core participant status.¹³¹³

8. Broadcasting

The Chair directed that the proceedings would be broadcast, as has occurred in respect of public hearings in other investigations. For anonymous witnesses, all that was ‘live streamed’ was the audio sound of their voice.

¹³¹³ Restriction Order, 23 March 2018.

9. Redactions and ciphering

The material obtained for the investigation was redacted and, where appropriate, ciphers were applied, in accordance with the Inquiry's Protocol on the Redaction of Documents.¹³¹⁴ This meant that (in accordance with Annex A of the Protocol), absent specific consent to the contrary, the identities of complainants, victims and survivors of child sexual abuse and other children were redacted; if the Inquiry considered that their identity appeared to be sufficiently relevant to the investigation, a cipher was applied. Pursuant to the Protocol, the identities of individuals convicted of child sexual abuse (including those who have accepted a police caution for offences related to child sexual abuse) were not generally redacted, unless the naming of the individual would risk the identification of their victim, in which case a cipher would be applied.

10. Warning letters

Rule 13 of the Inquiry Rules 2006 provides:

"(1) The chairman may send a warning letter to any person –

- a. he considers may be, or who has been, subject to criticism in the inquiry proceedings; or*
- b. about whom criticism may be inferred from evidence that has been given during the inquiry proceedings; or*
- c. who may be subject to criticism in the report, or any interim report.*

(2) The recipient of a warning letter may disclose it to his recognised legal representative.

(3) The inquiry panel must not include any explicit or significant criticism of a person in the report, or in any interim report, unless –

- a. the chairman has sent that person a warning letter; and*
- b. the person has been given a reasonable opportunity to respond to the warning letter."¹³¹⁵*

In accordance with rule 13, warning letters were sent as appropriate to those who were covered by the provisions of rule 13. The Chair and Panel considered the responses to those letters before finalising the report.

List of convictions

There have been various convictions for sexual offences against children over the period covered by this investigation. Convictions of residential care staff for sexual abuse of children in residential care and convictions for child sexual abuse in foster care are listed below. Where the conviction was for non-recent abuse, the timeframe of the abuse is listed along with the year of conviction. Where the conviction was for recent abuse, only the year of conviction is listed. Convictions for harmful sexual behaviour are not listed because, by their nature, those who were convicted were children at the time of the offence.

The Sexual Offences Act 1956¹³¹⁶ included offences of rape, unlawful sexual intercourse with girls under 16 and indecent assault of children.

The Indecency with Children Act 1960¹³¹⁷ introduced the offence of gross indecency with a child under the age of 14.
